PREFACE

Indifferently kept, until recent years, vital statistics have lately assumed an unprecedented importance. To many citizens the necessity of establishing proof of citizenship gives to vital statistics a significance in addition to that evaluated by historians, sociologists, actuaries, political scientists, public health authorities, and even genealogists. Until recently, also, the considerable amount of public and semi-public vital statistics which have been accumulated were comparatively inaccessible. In the course of their inventories of public archives, the several Historical Records Survey projects in the country listed and described much archival material relating to births, deaths, marriages, and divorces. A Guide to Public Vital Statistics in Tennessee was issued in June 1941. As the second most important source of vital statistics, the large and almost untouched mass of church records can be used to fill in or complete gaps in public vital statistics. Designed as a supplement to its Public Vital Statistics Guide, the Tennessee Historical Records Survey planned publication of a Guide to Church Vital Statistics in Tennessee drawn from its surveys of church archives.

Of necessity, such a guide would be incomplete and, with the urgency for publication, could not represent a polished editorial job. Only those archives of some 3,400 churches in 34 counties, which had been processed by the Tennessee Historical Records Survey, could be listed. In a number of instances, not all the churches in some counties were surveyed, and their archives listed; other churches which were surveyed are not listed, since no records were found.

The vital statistics are described under each church. The types of records, dates, and whether the Register, or vital statistics record, is kept separately or in some other record are indicated. The churches are arranged alphabetically by sections and alphabetically thereunder by denominations. It has been found necessary, in the case of the four largest counties, to use a more detailed sectional breakdown. In each instance, the sectional arrangement follows that in the Tennessee Historical Records Survey's Directory of Churches: Davidson (1940), Hamilton (1940), Shelby (1941), and Knox (1941).

In several cases, standard recheck procedures and techniques were not applied to the records, and some descriptions in this Guide are therefore based upon preliminary field inventories. Many of the original field inventories were made many months ago, and actual existing conditions may no doubt have changed in varying degrees in many churches since the inventories were made. This applies particularly to records custodians; the latest available information from the files has been given with respect to the custodians, their titles and addresses. While in some cases pastors of the various churches may have changed pulpits, it is expected that for the most part the records have been maintained at the church and not removed.

This volume also contains explanatory notes, an introductory sketch of the history of Tennessee with particular emphasis on denominations to give the reader information and perspective regarding the individual churches, a bibliography, and a place-name index arranged by sections. The omission of any church would indicate that the church was either not surveyed or that no records were to be found. Gaps in dates of the records indicate periods for which no records were located.

Preface

The original field inventories were made by a considerable number of pro ect employees under the supervision of Edith L. Pierce, James E. Davis, Arch Faidley, Jr., and the undersigned. Editing of the entries was done by Ballar O. Donnell and Reginald B. Martin. The introductory sketch was written by Nicholas P. Hobson, Jr. Proofreading and checking was done by Virginia H. Sibert and Lucile Hosale, mimeographing by Sue S. Jones, and indexing by Ruth M. Foster. Typing and cutting of stencils was done by Helen P. Allen, Virgin Miller, Mayme Gray, Marie P. Stewart, and Mary B. Morel under the supervision of Vylva I. Holland. Editing and publication of the book was under the super vision of the undersigned.

Preparation of this book was instituted while Madison Bratton served as State Supervisor of the Tennessee Historical Records Survey. When this proje was discontinued in April 1942, the work of completion of the volume was unde taken by the present project. Both of these projects have been under the ger eral administrative direction of Mrs. Betty Hunt Luck, State Director of the Service Division, and T. Marshall Jones, Section Chief of War Services.

Acknowledgement of cooperation is due to all officials of churches whose records are listed in this inventory. Particular acknowledgment is made to D W. C. Williams, Commissioner of Public Health, and Dr. D. C. Peterson, Direct of the Division of Vital Statistics, who requested publication of the volume. Acknowledgment is also made to William D. Price and Dennis W. Eagan of the Tennessee State Planning Commission for valuable suggestions and criticisms.

EXPLANATORY NOTES, ABBREVIATIONS, AND SYMBOLS

Explanatory Notes

Vital statistics kept by the churches are maintained solely for their use as reference to membership and in preparing reports of their activities. In a great many instances, these records have been irregularly or inconsistently kept. Generally, the individual churches do not follow specific practices in listing vital statistics, and the methods used vary among the different denominations. The most complete Register, or record of vital statistics, containing information of this nature will show baptisms, marriages, members, and deaths; in many cases, however, only one, or a combination of the aforementioned items is maintained. This information is either kept separately or with other records, generally in the Minutes, although it may sometimes be listed in the Sunday School or financial records. Many of the larger denominations have standard requirements providing that the pastor, clerk or secretary, or other officials retain custody of these records.

The Presbyterians conform to this practice in most cases, keeping vital statistics information in the Session Minutes, and occasionally in a separate register in custody of the clerk of the session. The Baptists do not adhere strictly to any given practice as each church is self-governing. Many Baptist churches maintain vital statistics in the Minutes, others keep a separate Register or card file in custody of the pastor or the clerk. The Church of Christ is one of the few denominations in Tennessee which is an independent body without affiliations. As a rule, these churches do not maintain records, but in some cases a separate Register of vital statistics has been found. It is left to the discretion of the elders how the records are to be kept and who is to keep them.

It is the duty of the pastor in charge of a Methodist Church to see that a permanent record of baptisms and marriages within the bounds of his charge is kept, to keep a register for his charge, with the name, time and manner of reception and dismissal of every person belonging to the church in his station, circuit, or mission; in charges containing more than one congregation, the names are arranged under the church or appointment to which they belong. In some instances, this information may also be found in the Minutes in custody of the pastor in charge. The Protestant Episcopal and Roman Catholic faiths are required by the canons to keep a uniform record of vital statistics, similar in recording with the exception that the Protestant Episcopal Church maintains one volume of the Register, whereas Roman Catholic Churches in most instances keep a separate volume for each type of vital statistics. These records are in custody of the priest or rector.

The colored churches, as a whole, follow the usual practices of the white denominations in keeping their vital statistics.

In this volume, each entry lists detailed information regarding the records of a particular church. The churches are arranged by sections within each county and alphabetically thereunder by denomination. In the four largest counties, the churches are divided into sections for ease in reference. This sectional arrangement follows Tennessee Historical Records Survey, Directory Churches in Davidson, Hamilton, Knox and Shelby Counties. The date of organization of each church is given after the name, and immediately below is the address. The date of the register is indicated in the left-hand column; following it is a description of its contents, together with the record in which it may be found if it is a contained record, and the name and address of the custodian of the record. Since last minute rechecks were not possible in all cases, custodians of some records may have changed. Defunct or inactive churches are indicated by closed dates after the name.

A place-name index arranged alphabetically by sections follows the bibliography to this book.

INTRODUCTION

The region of the State of Tennessee is part of once much-disputed Indian territory. By the Treaty of Paris in 1763 concluding the French and Indian War, French claims to territory east of the Mississippi River were ceded to the English.[1] The territory of Tennessee, claimed both by North Carolina and Virginia, was explored as early as 1748, when Thomas Walker penetrated to the present site of Kingsport.[2] In 1760, Richard Henderson sent parties of Long Hunters into the new country. Henry Scaggs passed through the Cumberland Gap in 1765 and explored the site where Nashville now stands. Shortly thereafter parties led by James Smith, Isaac Bledsoe, and Kasper Mansker traveled extensively through this region.[3] Actual settlement of Tennessee began in 1769, when William Bean located on Boone Creek near the Watauga River and Joseph Martin settled in Powell's Valley in Sullivan County. Evan and Isaac Shelby settled about the same time on the site where Bristol now stands.[4]

When the Treaty of Hard Labour opened the Western country to immigration, settlers from Virginia and North Carolina rushed into the new territory. By the Treaties of Long Island of Holston in 1777 and of Holston in 1791, the eastern section of the State was further opened for development.[5] As early as 1794, white traders were engaged in exchange with the Indians in the vicinity of present day Chattanooga.[6]

Even while the Revolutionary War was being fought on the Atlantic seaboard, the migration of settlers into Tennessee swelled. The Cumberland region in Middle Tennessee was settled by James Robertson and party who founded Nashborough in 1780. In 1784 the small settlements of Watauga and Cumberland petitioned North Carolina for the "salutary benefits of government."[7] North Carolina's reply was to cede the territory to the Congress under the Articles of Confederation. As a result, the Watauga settlers organized an independent western State called Franklin and adopted a constitution. Meanwhile, North Carolina repealed its act of cession, and with the expiration of John Sevier's term as governor, the State of Franklin collapsed.[8]

In 1789, the western region was again ceded by North Carolina, this time to the Federal Government, becoming the Territory of the United States South of the River Ohio under the administration of Governor William Blount. With the territorial population steadily growing in size, the settlers exhibited an increasing dissatisfaction with their status in the Union, and at the authorization of the Territorial Legislature, Governor Blount appointed commissioners to determine the number of residents in the territory. The returns made in the fall of 1795, listed a total of 66,649 free whites and 10,613 slaves.[9] As the required number for statehood was only 60,000 free inhabitants, upon the adoption of a State Constitution, Tennessee applied for admission in the Federal Union.[10] While President George Washington recommended admission of the State, Congress failed to concur, holding that the census should be taken under congressional authority before admission could be considered. Meanwhile, elections were held under the State Constitution. John Sevier was chosen governor, and the General Assembly convened at Knoxville on March 28, 1796. Congress subsequently authorized admission of the State, and on June 1, 1796, Tennessee became the sixteenth State of the Union, the first erected out of a territory of the United States.[11]

Early travel was made along trails blazed by the first pioneers. Robertson followed Boone's Wilderness Trail through Cumberland Gap to reach the Nashville region in 1779. By 1789 North Carolina troops had cut a road which followed an Indian trail from the Clinch River, near present Kingston, to the Nashville settlement.[12] This remained the chief road until the Treaty of Holston, when provision was made for construction of a road to the Cumberland settlements, completed in 1795, which led from Knoxville to Kingston, through Indian country for a hundred miles, and crossed the Cumberland River north of present Carthage, reaching Nashville by way of Gallatin.[13] In 1791, a Federal post office was established at Knoxville, and in 1797 the route was extended westward to Nashville.[14] The Natchez Trace, completed in 1807, ran from Natchez, Mississippi, to Nashville, and northward the Tennessee Path connected Nashville with Lexington, Kentucky.[15]

Following Tennessee's entrance into the Federal Union, a decade of litigation ensued because she denied the claims of Congress and North Carolina to part of her land. By the settlement of 1806, however, Tennessee agreed to satisy the North Carolina claims and surrendered to Congress land west of the Tennessee River.[16] Indian claims to land east of the Mississippi were relinquished in the Chickasaw Treaty of 1818 to the Federal Government, and the territory was opened to settlement.[17] The panic of 1819, together with the general westward movement, encouraged thousands of people to migrate to the western region,[18] which was then only sparsely settled, although settlements had been made as early as 1794 at the mouth of Wolf River and on the Lower Chickasaw Bluff. In 1819, John Overton, Andrew Jackson, and General James Winchester laid out on the Lower

Chickasaw Bluff the town of Memphis.[19] Meantime, Nashville, because of her location on the Cumberland River, was rapidly developing into a manufacturing and shipping center, after 1843 becoming the State Capital.[20]

In the 1830's the question of internal improvements in the State held considerable public interest. While the Eastern section was mainly dependent upon overland trade because of obstructions to navigation in the Tennessee River, Middle and West Tennessee were better provided with navigable outlets.[21] When in 1830, by an appropriation of $150,000 the water courses were greatly improved, the population became further interested in the possibilities of extending commercial activities. Because of political and sectional differences, however, much dissension was encountered before an Internal Improvements Act was passed in 1836.[22] Although the legislature granted three railroad charters as early as 1831,[23] it was not until 1855, when the East Tennessee and Georgia Railroad was completed, that successful rail service began in East Tennessee.[24] This route ran south from Knoxville to Chattanooga, and was later extended to Bristol. The Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad was completed in 1853 and the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, connecting Memphis with the Atlantic Coast, was completed in 1857.[25] Road construction was also stimulated and a network of turnpikes radiating from Nashville was developed.[26] While East Tennessee began to develop industrially, the growing importance of cotton, wheat, and the steamboat brought prosperity to Middle and West Tennessee.

By 1840 Tennessee had become important as a pivotal state in National political campaigns, and bitter contests between the Whigs and the Democrats for control of the State held sway for the next two decades. Andrew Jackson was a dominant figure in national politics, and one of his followers, James K. Polk, was also elected President.[27]

There were fewer slaves in East Tennessee than in other parts of the State, and, as a result, this section was the heart of the anti-slavery movement in Tennessee.[28] In the years before the Civil War, as the slavery issue grew bitter, East Tennessee, because of its basic white small-farmer population remained opposed to the rest of the State. In the State referendum of February 8, 1861, on the issue of secession from the Federal Union, Tennessee voted

As late as 1827, this region contained nearly one-fifth of all anti-slavery societies in the United States and nearly one-sixth of the total membership; after 1837 anti-slavery societies disappeared in Tennessee, although influence of the movement was still evident in the eastern section of the State. against separation. In the next referendum of June 8, however, Tennessee threw in her lot with the Confederacy.[29] During the Civil War, Tennessee was the battleground of the war in the west. In the Chattanooga campaign of 1863, the Union victory at Missionary Ridge forced the Confederates to retreat into Georgia. Chattanooga became the Federal military base for Sherman's Atlanta campaign.[30] Confederate defeats in the Battles of Franklin and Nashville in 1864 broke the Army of Tennessee, contributing to the final defeat of the Southern cause in the west. President Andrew Johnson, who served as Military Governor of the State during part of the war, in June 1865 under Lincoln's plan of restoration, declared the "insurrection" in Tennessee at an end, and the State was restored to the Union in March 1866.[31]

The slaves were freed by an amendment to the State Constitution in 1865. To suppress violence by the Negroes and carpetbaggers, former Confederate soldiers organized the Ku Klux Klan in 1868 in Giles County and began a systematic terrorization of the Negroes.[32] During Reconstruction years, economic and political conditions slowly improved. Substantial gains were made in the manufacture of lumber products, woolen goods, and in grain milling. As urban manufacturing increased, Nashville, Memphis, Knoxville, and Chattanooga became the commercial and industrial centers of the State.[33]

Agriculture, Tennessee's primary industry, suffered greatly as a consequence of the Civil War. Farmers found their property devastated, and many were unable to meet mortages that fell due. The average size of farms dropped from 251 acres in 1860 to 91 acres in 1900.[34] Corn has long been the leading crop, with cotton second in value grown mainly in the fertile bottom lands of Middle and West Tennessee. Tobacco, followed by hay and forage, rank next in importance. Tennessee is also a leading livestock state.[35] Agriculture today employs more people and produces more wealth than any other industry in the State

Industry has also kept pace with the times. Chattanooga, in Southeastern Tennessee, is the chief industrial city in the State. Noted for her diversity of manufacturing, the city produces some 1,500 different articles, led by textiles and iron and steel products.[36] The tri-cities of Kingsport, Bristol, and Johnson City, in upper East Tennessee, have developed rapidly in recent years. Knoxville, home of the Tennessee Valley Authority, has been greatly benefited by this Federal program.[37] Nashville, the state Capital, is the commercial, manufacturing and distribution center for Middle Tennessee. In West Tennessee, the commercial cities of Memphis and Jackson are also centers for industrial activity, the former being the largest inland cotton port in the country.[38]

Tennessee's population in 1940 was 2,915,841, of which 1,027,206 were urban and 1,888,635 rural residents.[39]

Denominations

Baptists

Among the earliest churches in the State were two Baptist churches in East Tennessee reputed to have organized about 1765, one located on the Clinch River. After the Revolution, with further settlements in East Tennessee, the Baptists were strong enough in 1786 to form the Holston Association.[40] Two Baptist churches were in the Cumberland region of Tennessee by that date, one at Sulphur Fork and one at Red River. In 1796 the Cumberland Baptists organized the Mero District Association, and upon the dissolution of this organization in 1803, the Cumberland Association was formed.[41]

In West Tennessee early camp-meetings were held at Carter's Chapel, Shiloh's, Block's and Williams' camp-grounds. There were Baptist churches in lower East Tennessee as early as 1813. In 1822 the Hiwassee Association, covering the region ceded by the Cherokee Indians in 1819, was organized, but the Ocoee Baptist Association in Hamilton and Bradley counties was not organized until 1859.[42]

Although the Baptists were reluctant to encourage camp-meetings of the Great Revival, there arose certain doctrines destined to create wide dissension in their ranks. One was the promotion of missionary work among the Baptists. In opposition, a large anti-mission element developed, and Primitive Baptist groups were organized. Another result of the Great Revival among Southern Baptists was the movement for emancipation and abolition of slavery. This movement was stronger in East Tennessee than in the rest of the State, probably because of the fewer number of slaves in that region.[43] In 1936 there were in Tennessee 1,194 Missionary Baptist churches with a membership of 226,896, and church property valued at $9,045,658.[44]

Negro Baptists

Prior to the close of the Civil War the majority of Negro Baptists in Tennessee held membership in the white Baptist Churches, which in some instances admitted licentiates from the Negro members.[45] According to some authorities a Negro Baptist Church known as the Free Mission Church was organized in Nashville about 1840. Mount Lebanon Church in Columbia was founded in 1843, and Beale Street Church in Memphis was organized a few years before 1860 as the First Baptist Church.[46] Other early churches include Spruce Street Church, organized in 1848, and First Church, in 1866, in Nashville; Mount Zion Church, organized in 1864, in Knoxville; First and Second Churches, both organized in 1866, in Chattanooga.[47]

Introduction

In 1872, the Baptist State Convention of Tennessee was organized, antedating by 8 years the National Baptist Convention of America. In 1915, at the meeting of the National Convention a division occured over ownership and control of the Sunday School Publishing Board, the members favoring control of the Board by the convention withdrawing to form the National Baptist Convention U. S. A., Inc., while the remainder continued under the original name.[48] In 1936 there were 748 Negro Baptist churches in Tennessee with a membership of 140,077, and church property valued at $3,421,604.[49]

Churches of Christ

The churches gathered under the leadership of Thomas and Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott, and Barton W. Stone deplored human creeds and systems. When the Stone and Campbell forces in Kentucky merged to form the Christian Church, they affiliated with the Bethel Association which had separated from the Baptis Church of Christ in 1825.[50] In 1827, Rev. P. S. Fall, pastor of the Baptist Church in Nashville, embraced the teachings of Campbell, and renamed his church the Church of Christ. Campbell personally contributed to the growth of the movement, preaching in Nashville in 1830 and again in 1855.[51] David Lipscomb, coming to Nashville in 1857, also labored mightily for the Church.

Divergencies of opinion resulted in the formation of two parties, various called "Conservatives"and "Progressives" or "Antis" and "Digressives," now listed separately in census reports. In 1936 there were 564 Churches of Christ wi 49,379 members in Tennessee, and church property was valued at $1,718,575.[52]

Churches of God

There are a number of small religious groups in the nation using the name Church of God. Among the earliest is Church of God (Seventh Day), which traces its origin back to 1671. One group with headquarters at Anderson, Indiana, regards itself as a movement within the church rather than a denomination, beginning in 1880 in the Midwest.[53]

In 1886 the first effort at organization in Tennessee of the Church of God took place in Monroe County under the name of Christian Union, changed in 1907 to Church of God. Another branch, the (Original) Church of God, was organized at Birchwood, Hamilton County, in 1886. Still another group, the (Tomlinson) Church of God, split from the Church of God in 1922 over a constitutional question.[54] There were in 1936 in Tennessee 164 Churches of God, with a membership of 8,396, and property valued at $226,091.[55]

Introduction

Disciples of Christ

The Disciples of Christ trace their origin to a number of religious leaders who in the early Nineteenth Century pleaded for teaching of the Bible alone. In 1807, Rev. Thomas Campbell, a Presbyterian minister from Ireland, censured by his presbytery, withdrew from the synod and with his son, Alexander, formed the Christian Association of Washington, Pennsylvania, in 1809. Subsequently, they joined the Mahoning Baptist Association which disbanded in 1829.[56]

Rev. Barton W. Stone, another Presbyterian minister, emerged from the Great Revival with a following called the Christian Church. In 1832 a partial union of the Stone and Campbell groups was effected in Lexington, Kentucky, as the "Christian Church," or "Church of Christ," and rarely "Disciples of Christ."[57] The new organization grew rapidly in Tennessee, largely by taking over Baptist congregations.[58] With the expansion of the church, however, the membership split into "Progressives," favoring the organization of missionary societies and use of instrumental music in the Church, and "Conservatives" opposing these additions. Although both parties were listed under "Disciples of Christ" in the Census report of 1890, the report for 1906 showed the Conservatives separately as "Churches of Christ." In 1936 there were 116 Disciples churches with 23,899 members in Tennessee, and church property valued at $1,731,236.[59]

Jewish Congregations

The earliest Jewish settlements in Tennessee were probably made along the Holston River in 1778 in present Hawkins County. The first permanent Jewish settlements appeared in Memphis in the early eighteen-forties. While both Knoxville and Nashville were settled earlier than Memphis, the Jewish inhabitants were too few to maintain organizations until after 1850. A Hebrew Benevolent Society was organized in Memphis in 1850, and in 1853 the Congregation Children of Israel was founded. In 1854, this congregation and the Congregation Shield of David in Nashville were chartered.[60]

B'nai Yeshurun Congregation was organized in Nashville in 1862, uniting with Congregation Shield of David in 1868 to form Congregation Khal Kodesh Ohavai Sholom (Lovers of Peace). Beth El Congregation, formed in 1866 as the Hebrew Benevolent Society, was the first congregation established in Knoxville. Although Jewish settlements were made in Chattanooga as early as 1858, it was not until 1866 that the Hebrew Benevolent Association, later Mizpah Congregation, was organized.[61] The 1936 census showed a total of 23,275 Jews in Tennessee belonging to 18 congregations, and congregational property valued at $788,500.[62]

Methodists

The Methodists were generally more successful in frontier Tennessee in attracting adherents than either the Presbyterians or Baptists. Bishop Francis Asbury introduced into Tennessee in 1778 the circuit system and by 1783, the Holston Circuit was organized with Jeremiah Lambert as its first appointee.

Introduction

The first Methodist church in Tennessee was established in 1786 in Sullivan County near the present site of Blountville. In 1788, the French Broad and the New River Circuits were formed in East Tennessee, and in the following year the Holston District.[63] Rev. Benjamin Ogden began preaching in Middle Tennessee in 1787, and organized present McKendree Church at Nashville. Prior to 1802, the Cumberland Circuit formed part of the Kentucky District, but in that year the Cumberland District was created and the Cumberland Circuit became the Nashville Circuit. Probably the earliest Methodist encampments in West Tennessee were Manley's Chapel and Manley's Campground in Henry County. The Great Revival increased severalfold the membership of the Western Conference. Beginning in 1799, the Revival ran its course by 1811, when a series of earthquakes in the Central Mississippi region produced another increase in membership of the church. As a result, the Tennessee Conference was organized in 1812, the Holston Conference in 1824 for East Tennessee, and the Memphis Conference in 1840 for West Tennessee.[64]

The slavery issue had a profound effect on the Methodist Episcopal Church. At the General Conference of the Methodist Church in 1844, in order to settle sectional difficulties amicably, a special committee prepared a Plan of Separation, under which the slaveholding states united into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This arrangement continued for nearly a century until a unification of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Protestant Church as "The Methodist Church" was consumated in April 1940.[65] The three bodies which merged in 1940 had in Tennessee in 1936 a total of 1,239 churches, 199,450 members and property valued at $14,830,558.[66]

Negro Methodists

Probably the oldest Negro Methodist church in Tennessee is Warner Tabernacle, African Methodist Episcopal, organized in Knoxville in 1845. Among other early Negro Methodist Churches organized in the State are St. John's and St. Paul's African Methodist Episcopal Churches in Nashville, both organized in 1863; Wiley Tabernacle, Colored Methodist Church, organized in 1867 at Chattanooga; Rising Sun Methodist Church organized in 1867 at Knoxville; and Collins Chapel, Colored Methodist Church, organized in 1860 at Memphis.[67] The African Methodist Episcopal Church itself was organized in 1816. Following closely upon the organization of this church, the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church was formed in 1822. For 20 years after their organization, operations of the new denominations were confined to the Northern States and comparatively little was done in the Southern States until immediately after the Civil War, at which time they extended rapidly throughout the State.[68] The Colored Methodist Church came into existence shortly after the close of the Civil War, being the remnant of the colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church,

Introduction

South, which had not already united with the other two Negro Methodist denominations. This church came into existence by mutual agreement between the white and Negro membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In Tennessee, in 1936, the African Methodist Episcopal Church numbered 131 churches, 12,968 members and owned church property valued at $563,130; the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, 105 churches, 9,009 members, and church property valued at $535,675; and the Colored Methodist Church 169 churches, 30,659 members, and church property with a valuation of $802,610.[69] There are also colored churches under the Central Jurisdiction of The Methodist Church, being churches formerly affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Presbyterians

Rev. Charles Cummings is reputed to have preached Presbyterianism to settlers in the Holston Valley in 1772. Prior to 1780, Revs. Samuel Doak and Joseph Rhea were preaching to congregations in Sullivan County. New Bethel Church, probably the first Presbyterian Church in the State, was organized in 1782 in the Forks of the South Holston and Watauga Rivers.[70] Presbyterianism was brought to the Cumberland country in 1785, when Rev. Thomas B. Craighead founded both a school and a church near Nashville. The First Presbyterian Church, of Nashville, however, was not organized until 1814. A cordon of Presbyterians extended from Watauga to the Cumberland section as early as 1790, and by 1797 there were 25 Presbyterian congregations in Tennessee.[71]

The opening of the nineteenth century witnessed a remarkable religious awakening in the United States, the Great Revival. Among leaders in the Cumberland country were many Presbyterian ministers. As a result of the Revival, the need for ministers became greater than the supply and men were ordained who had not the usual training. The revival party also accepted the Westminster Confession only with reservations. Due to these differences, the Synod of Kentucky dissolved the Cumberland Presbytery, composed mainly of the revival party. An independent Cumberland Presbytery was formed on February 4, 1810, in Dickson County and in March 1810, a Cumberland Presbyterian church in Giles County was organized. In 1822, on the Forked Deer River, the first sacramental Cumberland Presbyterian meeting in West Tennessee was held. Hopewell Presbytery was organized in 1824, and the Synod of West Tennessee formed in 1832. By 1850, the Cumberland Presbyterian Church outnumbered the parent church in Tennessee.[72] The Cumberland Presbyterian Church and the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America attempted to unite in 1867, but failed to do so, but a union of the two churches was effected in 1907 upon revision of the Westminster Confession.[73]

Introduction

Presbyterian churches also split on the issue of slavery. In 1858, the United Synod of the Presbyterian Church was formed by synods in border states. In 1861 southern churches withdrew from the Old School General Assembly to form the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the Confederate States of America which merged with the United Synod in 1864, becoming the Presbyterian Church in the United States. After the war, fraternal relations were established with the northern churches. Separate Negro churches of the Cumberland Presbyterian body were organized after the Civil War. The Tennessee synod of this group was organized in 1871 and the General Assembly in 1874. An independent Negro synod of the Presbyterian Church in the United States was organized in 1897.[74] In 1936 in Tennessee the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America had 178 churches, 17,261 members and church property valued at $1,938,400; the Presbyterian Church in the United States, 183 churches, 34,255 members, and church property valued at $4,688,092; the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, 235 churches, 19,556 members, and church property valued at $1,073,410.[75]

Protestant Episcopal

In 1825 Rev. James Hervey Otey conducted the first Protestant Episcopal services in Tennessee at Franklin and shortly thereafter at Columbia and Nashville. The earliest church in the State is Christ Church of Nashville, founded in 1826. In 1832 Calvary Church was organized in Memphis, St. John's Church in Knoxville in 1844, and St. Paul's Church in Chattanooga in 1853.[76] In 1936 there were in Tennessee 77 churches with 14,156 members, and church property valued at $1,525,450.[77]

Roman Catholic

Reputedly the first priest to minister to English-speaking Roman Catholics in Tennessee territory was Rev. William Rohan who appeared in the vicinity of Knoxville in 1789. Father Stephen T. Badin, first missionary in Tennessee, visited the scattered Catholics four times between 1808 and 1810. Father Robert A. Abell, second missionary, came to Nashville in 1820, and it is probable that the first Catholic Church in Tennessee was organized in Nashville in that year. In 1837, the Nashville Diocese was established with the Rev. Richard Pius Miles as Bishop.[78] The first Catholic Church in Knoxville was erected in 1852. Father Stokes was probably the first priest in Memphis, leading services there in 1839, and in the following year St. Peter's Church was founded in Memphis. Mass was not regularly offered in Chattanooga until 1850.[79] In 1936 there were in Tennessee 99 Roman Catholic churches, with a membership of 31,985, and church property valued at $2,482,479.[80]
