CONJUGAL POETRY.

An editor, David Parker, Esq., who has produced some of the best poetry ever written by a Maine man, pleased at a little incident that happened in his family, (the first occurrence of the kind) gives vent to his feelings in the following interesting and imaginative effusion, entitled

"MY CHILD'S ORIGIN."

One night as old Saint Peter slept,
He left the door of Heaven ajar,
When through a little angel crept,
And came down with a falling star.

One Summer, as the blessed beams,
Of morn approached, my blushing bride
Awoke from sweet and pleasing dreams,
And found that angel by her side.

God grant but this—I ask no more—
That when he leaves this world of sin,
He'll wing his way to that bright shore,
And find that door of Heaven again.

Whereupon, some fellow of a practical turn, without any imagination, and not possessed of the "divine afflatus," has attempted to destroy the illusion of David as follows:

SAINT PETER'S REPLY.

Full eighteen hundred years or more,
I've kept my door securely tiled,
There was no little angel strayed,
Nor one been missing all the while.

I did not sleep, as you supposed,
Nor left the gate of Heaven ajar,
Nor has a little angel left,
And gone down with a falling star.

Go ask the blushing bride, and see
If she don't frankly own, and say
That when she found that angel babe,
She found it by the good old way.

God grant but this—I ask no more—
That should your number still enlarge,
That you will not do as before,
And lay it to Saint Peter's charge.

A Select Story.

THE POISONED POWDER.

There are various traditions as to the origin of the Golden Lily upon the shield of France. Among these is the following incident, said to have occurred in the latter part of the [illegible] century, during the reign of Philip A[illegible]tus.

The Prin[illegible] when he ascended the [illegible] but the [illegible] hand with which he seiz[illegible] the reins of government, aweing the tu[illegible] no[illegible] and protecting the common people again[illegible]t their aggress[illegible] convinced them that he was not to be despised for his youth.

Though by this course he greatly endeared himself to the mass of his subjects, his life was more than once threatened, and even attempted; but these plots invariably originated among the haughty nobles who rested under the restraints imposed upon them by the King's strong arm, and his just and kindly heart.

In the summer of the eleventh year of his reign, weary of the cares of State, Philip retired with his court to his royal residence at Chaumont, which was a favorite resort to him.

Among his train was Geoffrey, Count de Neville, the natural son of Louis VII, the King's half-brother. He was a mild and inoffensive man, apparently well contented with the title and estate conferred by the late King upon his mother, and which he had inherited upon her death, but unfortunately, he married a haughty, ambitious woman, who was but illy-inclined to forego her claims to royalty.

At the death of Louis, she openly asserted that there had been a secret marriage between him and the late Countess de Neville, and upon the head of her son should rest the crown of France, he being the eldest born, and urged her husband to assert his claims. But this the Count refused to do, being ill-fitted by nature to act a part requiring more than usual energy and ability, besides entertaining too strong an affection for the young King who had treated him with unusual kindness, to seek to deprive him of his rightful inheritance.

If Philip heard of the pretentions which the Countess set forth, he manifested no outward token of displeasure or distrust. On the contrary, he gave his brother many evidences of regard, appointing him to honorary offices near his person, although he took care that they were such that they conferred but little power.

This was a new source of grievance to the haughty Countess, who never relinquished the idea of becoming a Queen, and had fondly imagined that, on account of Philip's youth, his brother would obtain such a strong ascendancy over his mind, as would make him King in reality, if not in name.

This disappointment was felt with increased bitterness when she became the mother of a son, in whom she centered all her ambitious hopes, and all the love she was capable of feeling for any one.

Unlike our modern fine ladies the dames of high degree of that remote period, were early risers; and the Countess de Neville often took long rides on horseback before the dew was off the grass, unattended, except by her groom, who kept at a respectful distance, just near enough to be within call, should his lady require assistance.

One morning she paused in front of a little cottage, situated in a perfect wilderness of bloom. As an involuntary ejaculation of surprise and admiration escaped her lips, a pretty, intelligent looking girl raised her bright eyes from the rosebush she was pruning.

"I have some handsomer within, arranged in bouquets," she said, smiling, "if madam would like to examine them."

Throwing the reins of her horse to her attendant the Countess alighted, much to the surprise of the servitor, who had never known his haughty mistress to be guilty of so much condescension before.

As the Countess entered the little, low room, the pretty flower girl displayed her beautiful collection of bouquets with pardonable pride.

"All or any of them are at your service, with the exception of this," she said, pointing to one composed of golden lilies and white roses, and relieved by a few leaves of green; "it is for the King."

"So King Philip buys the flowers, pretty maiden?"

"Yes, madame; I have orders to bring them to the palace daily. The golden lily is his favorite flower; and there are only those in bloom to-day."

"I will take this," said the Countess, selecting one of the bouquets, and taking from her purse a gold piece of more than double the value, "but first bring me a cool draught of water from the spring yonder."

With a light step the young girl took a pitcher and passed out to the spring that was but a short distance from the door. As she glided by the window on returning, she glanced in and saw, much to her surprise, her visitor bending over the stand of flowers, and apparently sprinkling something from her hand upon those she had laid aside for the King. When she took it away her eye caught a gleam of a small golden flask, such as the ladies of that period used for their cosmetics and perfumery. But when she entered the room, she found her in the same position in which she had [illegible]

She could not forbear a[illegible] surprise as she observed [illegible] her co[illegible]

"'Tis but the odor of the [illegible] the Countess as drawing her robe [illegible] her she turned to the door.

"Take my advice, my good girl; place the stand nearer the window, and be not much over them; their perfume is quite too strong for so small a room."

There was something about these words, carelessly spoken though they were, that deepened the undefined suspicions in the young girl's heart; and following her suggestion, she placed the stand of flowers directly in front of the open window. Then by a close examination of the bouquet destined for the King she detected the presence of a fine white powder, so impalpable to the eye upon the white petals of the rose but clearly visible upon the lilies whose peculiar shape by exposing the leaves to the full rays of the sun as well as their vivid coloring, threw it into strong relief; and as she bent over them the faint but penetrating odor that arose made her so giddy that she would have fallen had it not been for the tall and shapely youth who had just entered and whose livery showed him to be in the service of the King.

It was her lover, Francois, King Philip's body servant, and who, passing by the house, called to have a chat with his betrothed.

"How, now, Marie?" he said, looking into her face. "What has frightened the roses from your cheek, and given you such a strange look?"

The honest hearted fellow was sincerely attached to his royal master, and he listened gravely to Marie's account of the strange conduct of her visitor, and the suspicions to which it gave rise.

"It has a bad look," he said thoughtfully; "though I believe there is nothing in it. By good luck, I have orders to attend his majesty in his private apartments an hour hence. I will put him on his guard; then surely no harm can come of it."

Somewhat to the surprise of Francois, the King manifested no disquietude at this disclosure, though the grave look and attentive manner with which he listened, showed that he considered it of no light import. He bade him charge Marie to tell no one of what she had discovered, but to come to the palace with her flowers an hour earlier than was her wont, by no means forgetting her golden lilies.

King Philip sat in his audience hall, surrounded by his retinue. A number of the royal family stood near him—among them the Count de Neville, his wife, and the little son, a sweet boy of three, whose winning and sprightly ways made him a favorite with the King.

"And please your Majesty, Marie, the flower girl is waiting without," said one of the guard.

"Admit her," said the King.

Marie ha[illegible] robes of state [illegible] rounded him im[illegible] of awe as she entered[illegible] dissipated by the King as he bade her approach.

"I see you have not forg[illegible] flower," he said, taking th[illegible] hand.

"Just admire those [illegible] Countess, and inhale the[illegible] ses."

"But why do yo[illegible] he asked, as with [illegible] she drew [illegible] have placed [illegible]

"I—I crave your [illegible] stammered, "but the odor of the [illegible] me thus."

The King's eyes follow[illegible] Countess as she retreated to the window at the further end of the hall, under the pretext of obtaining air. He then fixed [illegible] searchingly on her husband's face whose in[illegible] seemed to be entirely occupied by the laughing boy he held in his arms.

Attracted by the bright color of the lilies, the child stretched out his [illegible] them. A sudden thought struck the King as he observed this.

"See how eagerly Louis is regarding them!" he said, turning to the Count. "Let him have them."

With a fond smile the father took the flowers and held them before the boy, who, catching them with both his dimpled hands, raised them with a gleeful shout to his lips.

Instantly a deadly pallor overspread his face, and with a faint gasp he fell dead in his father's arms!

The Countess had kept a furtive watch on the King's movements from her retreat, and forgetting everything in her terror, sprang forward to arrest her husband's arm.

"Monster!" she exclaimed, glaring upon him like a tigress robbed of her young, "you have destroyed your child!"

"And you," said Philip, pointing significantly to the flowers, still clasped in the child's rigid fingers, "you would have murdered your King!"

"Is this the woman that called at your [illegible]age this morning?" [illegible] Marie.

"The same, your Ma[illegible]

As soon as the Count compr[illegible] the full meaning of these words, he cast a look of horror and detestation upon his wife, then taking his dead boy, he laid him on a pile of cushions at the King's feet.

"I can lay before you no stronger proof, sire," he faltered, "that I was ignorant of the existence of this plot against your life."

As Philip looked upon the still, sweet features of the child, and then upon his father, his eye softened.

"You are right. God knows that I would fain have spared your loyalty so severe a test."

"I wish you all to bear witness," he said, addressing those around him, "that I fully exonerate Count de Neville from all complicity with his wife in this attempt upon the life of your King."

"As to you," he added, turning to the guilty woman, "I give you twenty days to leave the kingdom. If after that time you are found in my domains, you shall suffer the full penalty of your crime."

King Philip did not forget the debt of gratitude he owed to Marie and his faithful attendant. He was present at the marriage, which occurred a few days after, bestowing a dowry on the bride, and other substantial marks of favor; and ever afterwards, in commemoration of his Providential deliverance, he bore upon his shield the "Golden Lily."

April.

The name of this month is derived from a Latin word, signifying to open. The Romans consecrated the first day of the month to Venus, as the flowers at this time begin to cover the earth with beauty, and writers often designate it as the sweetest of the series, because it ushers in "the delicate-footed May,"

"Sighing, storming, singing s[illegible]
With her many wo[illegible],
April walks the wak[illegible] earth,
Whereso'er she look[illegible] and lingers,
Whereso'er she lays her fingers,
Some new charm s[illegible]ts into birth."

The April-fooling practice with which this month has immemorially been introduced is well known, though the origin of the custom does not seem to have hitherto been well settled among the antiquarians. Mr. Douce, an old and respectable authority, as we have somewhere read, thus discourses on this point: "After all the conjectures," says he "which have been formed touching its origin, it is certainly borrowed from the French, and may, I think, be deduced from this simple analogy: The French call the April fish (poisons d' Avril) silly mackerel, or simpletons which suffer themselves to be caught in this month. But with us," he continues, "April is not the season of that fish, we have very properly substituted the word fools."

☞ "Is there much water in the cistern, Biddy?" asked a gentleman of his Irish girl, as she came up from the cellar. 'It is full on the bottom, sir, but there's none at the top, was her reply.

[illegible]ed dogs, gen[illegible] [illegible]mencing when both go on all [illegible] Whoever has watched the counte[illegible] a great Newfoundlier or St. Ber[illegible]ard, while looking from the hearthside to a chubby, chippy, perky baby, wriggling across the floor on its hands and feet, in those frog-like hitchings which the first and last children born into the world have begun to walk it in; whoever has thoughtfully looked into such a dog's face at such a sight, so proud and joyful to mothers, young and old, must have noticed an expression of intelligence and sympathy more than human. That is the dog's day of honor and gladness in the family circle. There he is on the floor with his master's youngest child on an equal footing. He sees and feels it; let no one doubt that. Here and now they are both quadrupeds in faculties and manner of motion.

He loves to see the mother take the little being from her bosom and place it, back upward, on the carpet, and bubble over it with inarticulate raptures to see it work itself along from one figure to another. Don't put a selfish thought into that dog's mind.—Don't say that he feels an unworthy pleasure in the proof that every grand emperor, and every man who ever walked the earth since Adam, had to serve his apprenticeship on the floor on all fours, and move over it in a fashion which might well move the sympathy of a puppy of the same age, or any other little quadruped of benevolent disposition. No, a real Newfoundlander is too generous for comparisons so derogatory to his master's humanity. It is not with the sympathy of pity but of love, that he watches the movements of the little being on the carpet or in its mother's arms. He longs and loves to take part in bringing it on. He loves to feel its little, short, fat arms buried in the long hair of his neck; its soft, white fingers clasping his long ears. What tugging and touzling, and pinching and pulling at the tail he will take, all in the fun and frolic of the daily gambol, and never whine or wince even with a pain that would make the father of a child cry out and put a bitten [illegible] to his mouth. And what member of the family is prouder or happier than he when that child finishes its long apprenticeship as a quadruped, and stands for the first time upright on what were once his hind feet, and makes two steps forward before its limpsy body loses its balance, and it comes down again to its original condition in a squashy concussion with its forehead against the floor.

Doesn't he, with all the intelligible speech of eye and tail, say just what the father says with more fun in his face? "Don't cry, Teddy! up and try it again!" With what tenderness and delight he turns saddle-horse and carriage-horse for the little thing when it is first taken out of doors to see the birds and hear them sing, and to be introduced to the old Muly in her crumpled horns, to Jenny the pony, and to the feathered bipeds of the barnyard circle! Of all the eyes watching that child up to boyhood, whose are fixed on him oftener, longer and fondlier than those now beginning to look out dimly from under the grey eyebrows of that old housedog? The youth, full of life and vigor, does not remember the time when he crept on his hands and feet across the floor; but that old dog, napping longer at the fireside now than then, remembers it, and follows him with all his first love and truthfulness; follows him often, hesitatingly and wistfully at a distance, even when told to "go back," in a tone that goes to his heart. That eye follows him last as he recedes from sight, and greets him first on his return.—Its look at its last closing is full of its first love; and if it were permitted to open again in paradise it would glisten there in the light of that love unquenched by the grave.

This dog was endowed with the nature that does honor to his kind and good to a higher race. Lying there by the doorstone, or making short morning trots up and down the sidewalk, he espied this little child on the other side of the street. If the truth were known, I am sure that it would be found that the child's father had no dog for his home, and the dog's owner has no child for his. This was probably the secret of their first acquaintance. Their sympathies and affinities worked in them to the same impulse. The dog, in one of his walks on that side of the street, met the baby turn-out, and looked over the rim of the little basket carriage, and looked, as a loving dog can look, straight into a pair of baby eyes, peering upward with querying wonder at the blue world above. It was the face he had seen against the nursery window from the opposite side. Of course, seeing such a hairy face, with its tender eyes, come suddenly between its own and the sun, the child cocked up a fat foot, crowed, bit a thumb, smiled, and said "good morning!" as well as it could. The dog understood it, anyway.

Human friendships and loves as long as eternity have often commenced on as small a beginning of incident; and so began the beautiful sympathy and companionship between this intelligent, affectionate creature and the infant child of its owner's neighbor, just where the line of demarcation between the two races of beings is the thinnest and most obscure. Little by little, day by day, and week by week, this companionship went on, growing with the growth and strengthening with the strength of the little one.—The dog, doubtless because the master had no young child of his own, came at last to transfer frequently his watch and ward to the doorstone on the other side of the street; [illegible]ings that those baby-hands [illegible] themselves with! Thus gre[illegible] attachments. And to this [illegible] when one day, as the dog l[illegible] ward by the doorstone, th[illegible] out of the window above, [illegible] and fell head foremost upo[illegible] ment below. It never bre[illegible] was taken up out of the p[illegible] with fractured skull, motionl[illegible] The red drops of the young li[illegible] pattered the feet and face of the d[illegible] he sprang to the rescue. His heart died out within him, in one long whining moan of grief.—From that moment he refused to eat. He refused to be comforted by his master's home. Day by day, and night by night, he lay upon the spot where the child fell, with his shaggy throat pressed closely to the pavement, as if he would warm to life again the blood that had warmed it.

A SLIPPERY CHAP.—Residing in an Eastern city, some twenty years since, were two brothers-in-law, J. H. B—— and T. P. S——, both somewhat notorious, in the latter years of their lives, for their eel-like slipperyness. The former, under an indictment for a penitentiary offense, had fled to an adjoining State, where, by appointment, he was visited by the latter.

Having ascertained the whereabouts of the fugitive from justice, and with a requisition from the Governor, a Sheriff had been sent for his arrest, and, reaching the hotel where both were stopping, was informed that Mr. B—— was in his room with a friend. Going up, being an entire stranger to both of the parties, he blandly inquired:

'Is Mr. B—— in?'

'Yes,' said Mr. S——.

'I have a little private matter with you,' the Sheriff then remarked, 'and would like to see you alone a moment.'

'Certainly,' said Mr. S——; 'please step into the next room.'

With that suspicion always attached to guilt, Mr. B—— was not slow in deciding who the stranger might be, as also his business, and he accordingly slowly left the [illegible] the hotel.

After the Sheriff had read to him the warrant of arrest, supposing it to be Mr. B——, Mr. S—— asked

'Well, what is your purpose?'

'To take you to Boston.'

'How soon?'

'Immediately; the cars leave in a few minutes.'

'Certainly; I am ready.'

The Sheriff purchased tickets for two, and off they started. Arriving at Boston, Mr. S—— thanked the Sheriff for his politeness and liberality, in not only accompanying him home, but also for paying his fare; and then he informed him that his name was S——, and that Mr. B——, with whom he was conversing when called on at the hotel, and named in the warrant, was by this time well on his way to, if not already clear over, the Canada line. Then, politely bidding the Sheriff good-day, Mr. S—— left him to muse over the uncertainty of human affairs.

☞ A genuine Jonathan lately took a ride with his girl, and stopped at a store for a 'glass of gin with molasses.' It was prepared and swallowed at one draught; then turning to her said:

'Sal, that was durned good; why don't you buy some for yourself?'

☞ A handsome sleigh came dashing up to a swellfront mansion, one day last winter, in fine style, and, stopping, out sprang a sprucely dressed little fellow, who might have seen a dozen summers, but who had the air of one who labors under the impression that his father is considerably his junior in years and experience. Accosting a passing boy, probably a year or so older than himself, he haughtily exclaimed.

'Here, boy, hold my horse.'

The boy stepped up, and, looking at the animal, asked:

'Can one boy hold him?'

'Yes; certainly.'

'Well, then, hold him yourself,' continued he, passing on,

DUCKING WOMEN.—The Legislature of Virginia, in the good old days, two centuries and a half ago, enacted the following law for the punishment of women:

'At a grand assembly held in James Cittie, in the year 1616, were passed many acts to the glorie of Almightie God, and the publique good of his Majestie's colonie of Virginia.'

Among them was one entitled: 'Women causing scandalous suits, to be ducked.'

'Whereas, oftentimes many babbling women often scandalize their neighbors, for which their poor husbands are often brought into chargeable and vexatious suits and cost in great damage:

'Be it therefore enacted by the authoritie aforesaid, that in actions of slander occasioned by the wife, as aforesaid, after judgment passed by the damages, the woman shall be punished by ducking; and if the slander be so erroneous as to be adjudged at a greater damage than five hundred pounds of tobacco, so adjudged against her husband, if he refuse to pay the tobacco.'

If a similar law should be passed now, what an uproar it would cause. The negro question and 'restoration' would sink into insignificance.

[illegible]nce pronounced [illegible] of the Lower Pro[illegible] of Nazareth shall suffer death [illegible]teenth year of the reign of [illegible] Tiberius, and on the 24th day [illegible]onth of March, in the most holy [illegible]erusalem during the pontificate of [illegible]

"Pontius Pi[illegible], Intendent of the Province of Lower Gallilee, sitting to judgment in the presidential seat of the Prætor, sentences Jesus of Nazareth to death on the cross, between two robbers, as the numerous and notorious testimonies of the people prove:

"1. Jesus is a misleader.

"2. He has excited the people to sedition.

"3. He is an enemy to the laws.

"4. He calls himself the Son of God.

"5. He calls himself falsely the King of Israel.

"6. He went into the Temple followed by a multitude, carrying palms in their hands.

"Orders from the first Centurian, Quirrillius Cornelius, to bring him to the place of execution.

"Forbids all persons, rich or poor, to prevent the execution of Jesus.

"The witnesses who have signed the execution of Jesus are:

"1. Daniel Robani, Pharisee.

"2. John Zorobabel.

"3. Raphael Robani.

"4. Capet.

"Jesus to be taken out of Jerusalem through the gate of Tournes."

This sentence is engraved on a plate of brass, in the Hebrew language, and on its sides are the following words: "A similar plate has been sent to each tribe."

It was discovered in the year 1820 in the city of Aquilla, in the kingdom of Naples, [illegible] search made for Roman antiquities, and remained there until it was found by the Commission of Arts in the French ar[illegible] Italy. Up to the time of the campa[illegible] Southern Italy, it was preserved [illegible] of the Carthusians, near Na[illegible] it was kept in a box of ebony, [illegible] the relic has been kept in the Chapel of Caserta. The Carthusians obtained, by their petitions, permission to keep the plate, which was an acknowledgement of the sacrifices which they made for the French army. The French translation was made literally by members of the Commission of Arts. Denon had a fac simile of the plate engraved, which was bought by Lord Howard, on the sale of his cabinet, for 2,890f. There seems to be no historical doubts as to the authenticity of this. The reasons of the sentence correspond exactly with those in the Gospel.

A LOVE AFFAIR.—The New Albany Ledger says that a man named Price was engaged to be married to an heiress named Love, not a hundred miles from that town. The preparations were all made, the bridal party assembled, and the divine ready to tie the knot square and strong on the arrival of the groom. The gallant Price, however, hearing that his intended was not the heiress he supposed she was, upon consideration, changed his mind. He never appeared. The wretch! The spirit of the bride said come; those that were athirst said come: and, as if fulfilling the Scriptures, though more likely filling full themselves, those assembled partook freely of the wedding luxuries without money and without Price.

TRUTH.—I believe that nature herself has constituted truth as the supreme deity, which is to be adored by mankind, and that she has given it greater force than any of the rest; for being opposed, as she is on all sides, and appearances of truth, so often passing for the thing itself, in behalf of plausible falsehoods, yet by her wonderful operation, she insinuates herself into the minds of men; sometimes exerting her strength immediately, and sometimes lying hid in darkness for a length of time; but at last she struggles through it, and appears triumphant over falsehood.—Pelybus.

INFLUENCE.—Every man is a missionary, now and forever, whether he intends or designs or not. He may be a blot radiating his dark influences outward to the very confines of society, or he may be a blessing spreading benediction over the length and breadth of the world; but a blank he cannot be. There are no neutral characters. We are either the sower that sows and corrupts, or the light that splendidly illuminates, and salt that silently operates, but being dead or alive, every man speaks.

☞ A story is told of two New York aldermen, who were jealous of each other, and had tried on every occasion to put each other down. At one meeting, one of them made a motion, when his opponent insisted that it should be reduced to writing, and, unable to resist the temptation to exult at his advantage, cried out with a chuckle—'Ah! Teddy, I've got ye now, for divil the sthroke can you write at all, at all.'

☞ "Oh, mamma," said a little boy who had attended a strange church one Sabbath, "you ought to have been to church to-day to have seen the fun—a man trying to pump music out of an old cupboard?"

The above expresses the opinion of the Conservative members of the Legislature, by whom the matter was discussed fully, and to whom interested and other parties presented every reason to induce them to recommend a call. We hold that the judgment of this caucus is correct; that any effort to call a convention will tend to disintegrate and break up the party.

The vote in the caucus stood upon the motion of Mr. Bradley, fifty-six against a convention and nineteen for it.

Who's to Blame?

The friends of Democracy and the lovers of constitutional liberty, cannot but feel gloomy over the state of affairs now prevalent in Kentucky. A few months ago and no signs of discord were visible. Everything was working harmoniously. The conflicting passions and interests called into being by the war were fast subsiding. Men recognized that their true interests consisted in close union and fraternity. Silently and irresistibly, under the strong impulse of common interest and common safety, a party was being built up strong enough to defeat Radicalism, and cover it with overwhelming shame. Soon this party would have been compact, united and irresistible. No political quacks were needed to heal the scars of intestine war and no patent nostrums to unite the [illegible] of the people. This was only [illegible] of time and the progress was most [illegible]ful and cheering. But the [illegible] be let alone to arrange their [illegible] to bind up the severed bonds of political and social life. The repast for ravenous office-hunters and needy mendicants was too tempting, and like the foul Harpies at the banquet of Æneas, the politicians have rushed into the people's repast where love and fellowship prevailed, and with their foul breath and poisonous words, have polluted the feast of love and good-will.—Never was a fairer field offered for the unholy machinations of the malevolent goddess of discord; and never has opportunity been more diligently and perseveringly improved. Every little pot-house, low-grocery and small beer politician, too lazy to work for an honest living, and with heads empty as a scraped gourd, living and having their very being in strife and unholy dissensions, for the past four months, has been ranting around and haranguing, by inflammatory appeals, the factions and cliques over which they lorded with imperial sway. Newspapers have added their influence and striven to stir up bitterness. All shades of political opinion have been worked upon and their prejudices fostered and nourished.

Now, from the labors of these disinterested patriots, from the efforts of the men who love the interests of the State, with such idolatrous devotion and are so zealous for her honor, the witches' cauldron of politics is fairly boiling with its mixed ingredients; chaos reigns where there should have been light, and enmity where there should have been love. The needy patriots want place, patronage and power, and the people have been dosed with that physic that fattens the doctor but kills the patient. The elements of hostility to Radicalism that were beginning to unite so firmly, have been rudely separated, and we witness weakness where there should have been strength.

We do not believe this condition of affairs to have been inevitable. The overweening confidence of the Radicals, their illegal, arbitrary and unconstitutional policy and measures, their fierce hatred to every form of liberty, their vindictiveness towards all the slave States, loyal or disloyal, were enough to convince the people of Kentucky of the urgent necessity and the high importance of vigorous and hearty co-operation. Besides the thinking men all over the State were fast realizing the fact that there were but two parties in the country, the Republican and Democratic, and that a union with the latter held out the only salvation for the political happiness of Kentucky. Under the stress of these impending dangers and menaces, and under the conviction that the Northern Democracy held the freedom and destinies of the Republic in its hands, the people would eventually have coalesced, and when the time for the election of State officers had arrived, there would have existed no significance in the politics of [illegible] To harmonize the elements of [illegible]d centralize Democracy, and [illegible]ganization? and this at a time [illegible] minds are fevered with excite[illegible]en the glow of combat has [illegible]e face of the soldier. Har[illegible] a convention, indeed! The Cou-ri[illegible] pounced the political millenium too soon.

Again, we warn the people of this and other counties against this convention.—Its effects can only be evil and that continually. It is too late now to talk about a general convention of the whole Democracy. The movement in this direction has been made too late. Had it been necessary and practicable, it should have been inaugurated sooner. Had the members of the Legislature or two Democratic Committees called a convention, we do not now pretend to say what the result would have been. If this failure were an error, the time has passed to retrieve it. Now, we must look the fact in the face. We are called to respond to the invitation of only a portion of those styling themselves Democrats; and to this call let us not answer, not out of any factious spirit, but because it is antagonistic to the highest and most vital interests of the great principles and faith of the whole Democracy.

Jefferson Davis.

Whenever there is a lull in the fierce hatred of the Northern revolutionists, and there is wanting a theme on which to vent their devilish malignity, this illustrious prisoner and unfortunate man is dragged before the public gaze, and led out like some dangerous wild beast as a sport for his more brutal tormentors. We have had him tried by every possible tribunal known and unknown to the laws of the land. At one time we have had him arraigned before the august bar of the Supreme Court to answer the charge of treason. At another, we have had him murdered by a military commission. We are heartily wearied with this matter. We think the time has come when the inmate of Fortress Monroe should be released. He has sufficiently expiated the catalogue of sins written down against him in Yankee tracts and Sunday school books, by a long and rigorous imprisonment. The recent decision of the highest judicial tribunal in the land, renders it impossible to hand him over to the tender mercies of that strange court which was organized and sworn solely to convict.—The result of a trial before the civil courts for treason, no one can doubt.

And why immure this feeble old man any longer in the walls of a prison? Why shut from his view the light of day and cut him off from the friendly consolations of his family? The great body of the American people have no vengeful feelings towards him. With the subsidence of actual war, they have forgotten him as a great actor in a great conflict, and are willing that he should spend his few remaining years in peace. Then let him be released. Let him be returned to the bosom of his family. Let the first-fruits of the proclamation of the cessation of the war be seen in this act of magnanimity. When Jefferson Davis, by order of the President, walks out of his prison bounds, a few Yankees may raise a wolfish howl, but the American people will applaud this act, and another laurel will be added to the civic crown that encircles the brow of the Chief Magistrate of the nation.

The Bottom Knocked out of Another Black Republican Fact.—A statement has been going the rounds, originating, we believe, with that patriotic patriot and pious Christian preacher, Brownlow, who divulged it as a "little secret," in one of his harangues, to the effect that President Johnson, while the Freedmen's Bureau Bill was pending before Congress, had assured Generals Howard and Fisk that he not only did not disapprove of its provisions, but would attach his signature to it when it reached him. Gen. Howard is out in a letter denying the entire statement. We were satisfied at the time that his "little secret" was one of the Parson's customary mistakes.

☞ Nobody, says the Seymour Times, endorses Andy Johnson but returned rebel officers. We have all along labored under the delusion that Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Joe Hooker, Rousseau, Tom Crittenden, Wat Whitaker, Logan, Buel, and many other eminent soldiers, who endorse the President, were officers in the Union army.

event happened, and that do[illegible] reprobate "the deep damnation [illegible] ing off" of Mr. Lincoln. Every [illegible] shudders at the foul enormity of the cri[illegible] of assassination; and the 14th of April 1865, if remembered at all, will only be recalled to the minds of the American people by an event unparalelled in their history. But we never could discover in Mr. Lincoln any materials for a demi-god, or in the day of his death any substantial grounds for setting it up as a stated anniversary. A plain, unostentatious man, with some keenness of intellect and a fine talent for anecdote, with no enlarged views of statesmanship, the tool of stronger and clearer heads than his own, the mere puppet of power, has the good luck to be chosen President—the bad luck to get the country involved in a bloody and expensive war—publishes a proclamation—is great on the African—falls by the hand of a crazy enthusiast in a theater—and forthwith we are called upon to set him up as one of the great lights of American history. We are told he was a pleasant man, and genial companion, yet he approved the findings of the infamous military commissions who condemned innocent men to speedy deaths. We are told that the grasp of his mind was comprehensive, and that he ranks along with Washington in the historic niche; yet his talk was often like the low buffoonery of a harlequin. Kind and humane perhaps he might have been in his softer hours, but great, never! In him there existed no single element of greatness. He deserves no place in our Pantheon of eminent statesmen and heroes, and impartial history will assign him none. [illegible] will [illegible] preeminence [illegible] Erostratus the Ephesian who fired the temple of Diana.

A Disgraceful Scene.

On last Monday a scene was enacted in the Senate of the United States, that would have disgraced any haunt where the lowest and most abandoned of the human race do congregate.

Senator McDougal, of California, is a man of rare mental and oratorical gifts, and fine scholarly attainments: for these we admire him. He is a slave to the degrading habit of drunkenness; upon the altar of this terrible social Moloch, he habitually sacrifices his all of respectability, honors and fame: for this—did he but make the feeblest effort, so it was sincere, to break the Circean chains that bind him to the cup—we could extend him our pity, and would fain throw the mantle of charity over his faults. But when, as on Monday, while laboring under the effect of deep potations, he arose in his place in the Senate, and outraged all decency, our admiration for his great gifts takes wings unto itself, and our pity for his besetting weakness is changed to scorn, loathing and contempt.

The Senate owes it to its own dignity, owes it to the insulted and outraged public sense of the people of the United States, to immediately expel the drunkard, ruffian and blackguard from their body.

Does the Mt. Sterling Sentinel consider it honorable to denounce us savagely for an article it has been TOLD appeared in our paper, and then after seeing that it was mistaken not to make a correction, or has it been been reconstructed and makes no pretentions to honor.

We find the above in the Paris True Kentuckian, of the 12th inst. The first intimation we have had of our information being incorrect, is contained in the above quoted paragraph. The paper containing the alleged attack upon us we have never seen, nor did the number of the Kentuckian published immediately after the appearance of our article reach us. Consequently we were left in ignorance in regard to the matter. If we have wronged our cotemporary, we have no hesitattion in proffering the amende honorable, for we DO profess to be the peer of the conductor of the Kentuckian in everything that constitutes a gentleman and a man of honor.

If it is true, as reported, that the White House is constantly thronged by Sesesh feminines of easy virtue, who shape the action of the President, wouldn't it be well to supply their place with ladies of the same profession but of loyal sentiments? Let abolitionists look to this matter.—[Seymour Times.

By all means let them look to this matter. And, should they succeed in transforming the White House into a "loyal" bagnio, we recommend the editor of the Times for the position of "pimp" in the establishment. He is admirably fitted for it by nature, education, and inclination.

We understand that like many others Mr. Potter has suffered by the war, having lost during the rebellion all the hard-earned savings of his former years. He has bought the Seminary building on favorable terms, and hopes to meet the payments as they fall due by the proceeds of his labor. The Seminary is in need of repairs. It was badly used by the soldiers—was converted into a hospital—a[illegible] for school purposes until refitted. The fencing is burned, and the inside of the building greatly defaced. It will require at least $500 to put the house in a tenantable condition, and Mr. Potter has not the money to expend in this way. We think the town and county should furnish this sum, or at least enough to fit the building for opening the school. A general contribution will not be missed, and money spent in this way, like bread thrown upon the waters, will return before many days. It is true we are heavily taxed by municipal, county, State, and Federal imposts, but these are temporal things. To contribute money to advance education is infinitely higher than these things. We thus promote the interests of the souls and minds of men. We upbuild the character of our children on a firm basis of truth and virtue. We recommend these suggestions to the fathers and mothers of the town and county, and the friends of public morality and learning generally. ☞ Last week, just to air our "book larnin'," we indulged in a bit of Latin in one of our articles, whereupon a cotemporary berates us soundly, at the same time remarking that Nihil fit. Probably he did, but as we are unacquainted with Nihil, and know nothing about the fight, or who he fought with, or the cause of the quarrel, we don't consider it just to hold us accountable for the difficulty.

Tragedy in Lexington.—On Tuesday night last, in Lexington, Ky., a young lawyer named Woolley accompanied a young lady from a house at which she was visiting, to the house of a friend at which she intended to pass the night. On reaching her destination, Woolley accompanied her into a room, with the lady with whom she was to spend the night. Upon the latter leaving the room to get her sewing, Woolley arose and locked the doors. Alarmed at this proceeding, the young lady began to scream for help. Help came in the shape of policemen Worsham and Powell appeared on the scene. As the latter advanced on Woolley, he was shot through the heart and instantly killed. Woolley, on examination, was adjudged insane and sent to the Western Lunatic Asylum.

County Meeting.

[illegible]r a County Meeting to appoint [illegible] to the Louisville Democratic Con[illegible] of the first of May, appears in our [illegible]mns this morning. It is signed by [illegible]ny respectable gentlemen who have a perfect right to meet and do that which seems to them best. We shall claim the equal right of differing with them in opinion as to the propriety of their proposed action.

For four years our people have been divided into so many factions that no one outside the State could form a liable opinion as to what constituted the prevailing political sentiment. Many citizens of the State itself fell into egregious error on this head. To know their feelings thoroughly a man must have been born here, raised among this people, sympathized with them, participated in their sufferings, and witnessed the occurrences which each day affected them. This chaotic condition of things have not yet ended. We have an extreme Radical party, "your money or life" men, supporters of Congress in its war upon the Constitution—doubtful Radicals, hesitating between Congress and the President until it shall be seen which will be successful—moderate Radicals, who support the President, but will transfer their allegiance to Congress should Congress prove victorious—extreme but honest Union men, who, like Sir Boyle Roche, stand "ready to surrender not only a part but the whole of the Constitution in order to preserve the rest"—Conservative Union men, who look to the Constitution as the surest safeguard of the Union—Union men, who regard submission to tyrannical usurpations by the General Government as a less evil than resistance—Union men, who as honestly believe resistance to be the truest and safest policy—State rights men, who favored secession until the State decided against it, and then abided her decision—Secessionists, who denied that the question had been fairly decided by the State, and returned soldiers from the Southern army.

Even this enunciation will give but a faint idea of the condition of public sentiment in Kentucky. There are no distinct lines to separate one from another the different classes we have named. Each has its adherents more or less tinctured with the opinions of the class which immediately precedes or follows it. Each has its shadings which glide almost imperceptibly into those of its nearest neighbor. Indeed, with the exception of the extreme Radicals and the extreme Secessionists, for there are nearly as many diversities of opinion as there are individuals not connected with either of those two.

No one, not a Radical, will deny that this state of things is lamentable in the extreme. How to remedy it, is the question which we take it for granted every man who calls himself Conservative or Democrat is honestly trying to solve.

That some progress was made in this direction by the meeting in Frankfort, on the [illegible]th of May, which inaugurated the [illegible] last summer, cannot be de[illegible] called in the name of no [illegible] supporters [illegible] as [illegible] Democra[illegible] tended that the Legislature [illegible] elected betrayed any trust con[illegible] to them, or violated any promise they had made. None but the Radicals will deny that they relieved the State of a vast load of oppressive legislation, and strove honestly to advance the interests of every class of her people. During their session, the members decided by an overwhelming majority that it was unwise at that time to call a Convention. They so decided because they believed public opinion in this State had not become sufficiently consolidated to ensure harmonious movement in the usual party channels, and because they feared that any attempt to bind men by the action of a party convention would produce new dissentions.

Half a dozen very respectable gentlemen in Louisville thought differently.—These had been appointed a "Democratic Central Committee" by a Convention which assembled in Louisville in the summer of 1864, and in which less than one-third of the State was represented by a small number of delegates.

It is now contended that the members of the Legislature were not authorized by the people to decide the question of a Convention, but that such authority was properly vested by the people in the Central Committee. If the point to be determined is which body most properly represents the little Convention of 1864, then we decide in favor of the Committee. But if the point is whether the members of the Legislature, elected by the whole State in 1865, or six gentlemen appointed by a partial Convention in 1864, are most likely to represent truly the wishes of the whole people, at the present time, then we shall be constrained to a different conclusion.—And as the latter is to our mind the only question of real importance, its decision will be our guide until it is revoked.

But waiving the question of authority, as one of little importance, we hold that the proposed Convention will inevitably add to our dissensions. Without the union which formed the Conservative Democracy of last year, the State would have been carried by the Radicals. No one will question that fact; and no one of our friends will deny that it would have been a terrible misfortune. The Central Committee virtually dissolves the alliance which has been so beneficial. It is true that their call is in terms quite general, but the Committee certainly had no authority to invite to a Democratic Convention any person not a Democrat by profession and practice.—However broad the language of the invitation, it is notorious that none are expected to attend the Convention but those who are willing to assume the faith and the livery of the party; who will pledge themselves beforehand to support whatever principles it may enunciate and whatever candidate it may place in nomination. This is precisely what thousands of conservatives are not willing to do.—We wish to retain their assistance in the support of leading principles upon which we can agree, leaving them at liberty to differ from us on minor points. The Committee likewise want their support, but cannot admit them to any participation in the direction of the affairs of its party, unless they will surrender themselves entirely to its control. It is plain to our mind that the inevitable result of such a course, if persisted in, will be to restore the divisions which, under a better policy, were just beginning to be healed.

There would have been some excuse for the action of the Committee if the call of a Convention had been demanded with anything approaching unanimity by its own party. But so far is this from being true that the Committee acted on their own suggestion, against the protest of many to whom their purpose was communicated; and, even now that the call has been made, it is disapproved of by a large and influential portion of the party in whose behalf it purports to have been issued. It is an abuse of words to say that a call made under such circumstances as these, is made for the purpose of harmonizing the people of Kentucky.

FRIDAY, - - - - APRIL 20, 1866.

LOCAL ITEMS.

☞ S. H. PARVIN, 63 West Fourth Street, Cincinnati, is our agent for that city.

☞ W. NOBLE & Co., Industrial and Commercial Gazette office, Louisville, Ky., are our authorized agents for that city.

☞ See advertisement of Pocket Book lost in another column.

☞ Hoffman & Co. have just received a large invoice of fine French china ware.

☞ The attention of stock raisers is directed to the advertisement of the fine jack Veto, to be found in another column.

☞ We this week announce Mr. Sam'l L. Williams as a candidate for Town Marshal, at the ensuing June election.

DIED—One day last week, at his home, JOHN WILLIAMS, an old and respectable citizen of Winchester, Ky.

☞ The Grsssy Lick Turnpike Company advertise for bids for the construction of five miles of their road. See advertisement.

☞ Wm. Hoffman will sell on the 27th inst., a valuable town lot adjoining the seminary property. The lot is suitable for building or gardening purposes.

☞ Hon. Garrett Davis will please accept our thanks for a copy of the official army register, and other valuable documents.

SLENDID INVESTMENT.—The Kentucky Prize Concert, to be drawn at Lexington Ky., May 31st. Valuable Gifts for one dollar. See advertisement in another column. 37td

☞ PETERSON for May is on our table. As usual, its engravings are perfect gems of art, and its literary matter of a very high order of excellence. It is not only the cheapest but the best of our monthlies.

☞ The attention of our readers is directed to the advertisement of the Kentucky Insurance Company. This is a home company, and should be patronized by the people of the State.

☞ We understand Mr. James H Roberts, the present proprietor of the "Roberts House" in this place, contemplates leasing the Olympian Springs, and opening them this summer for the benefit of the pleasure seeking public.

☞ Lee & Wilson, in addition to their present stock of Cassimeres, have samples of all kinds and grades, which they furnish to order. Call at their store, examine samples, leave your order, and in three or four days you have your goods.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.—The children of the Christian Sunday School are requested to meet in the Presbyterian Church, on next Sunday, at 4 o'clock, P. M. An address will be delivered by Mr. G. C. Lockhart. The children of the other Sunday schools are invited to be present.

☞ On Monday evening last, a couple of gentlemen engaged in an altercation on Bank street, in this city. Pistols were drawn, but the intervention of bystanders prevented a tragedy. The excitement was intense for a few moments. It all ended, however, in liberal contributions to the Metcalfe fund.

FIRE.—We regret to learn that the residence of Mrs. Allen, widow of Chilton Allen of Winchester, was consumed by fire one day last week. It was occupied at the time by Mr. Cheeny, the pastor of the Presbyterian church, and for a long time principal of the Winchester Female Academy. Nothing was saved.

☞ On Sunday, one of our young bloods started to the country in a buggy, drawn by a fast team. The team proved a little too fast on this occasion, leaving the blood and his buggy a good deal in the condition of Lowry's buttermilk—scattered along the road in spots. Moral: It is sometimes safer to walk out to see a sweetheart than to drive out "in style."

"KENTUCKY HOTEL."—We again remind our readers of the excellent qualities of this house. Always up with the season, the table is supplied with everything the market affords, and served up in a style that will satisfy the most fastidious. Mrs. Carter, the proprietress, with such indomitable energy, with polite and accommodating clerks, justly deserves the patronage of the public.

MT. STERLING AND LEVEE TURNPIKE ROAD.—The stockholders of this road met at Wilkerson's shop on Saturday last, and elected the following officers: President, Marion Oldham; Directors, M. W. Anderson, Richard McKee, Dr. J. P. Turner, Frank Chenault, George W. Anderson; Will H. Winn, Treasurer and Secretary.

We are informed the company have secured the services of Gen. Ammen to survey and locate the route, and that it is their intention to at once put the road under contract.

☞ Barnes & Yeates are out to-day in an announcement of their Spring Importations. Their stock was selected by the senior member of the firm, who is not only a merchant of large experience, but a gentleman of acknowledged, cultivated, and fastidious taste. So popular, indeed, are his selections, that he never singles out a "bright, particular star" from the constellation of Montgomery beauties, but she succeeds in finding a husband right away.—Miller is "an old married cuss," but never lets on to the country girls, and is as successful in "flatthering" the green-backs out of their pockets, as if he were a spruce young beau on the look-out for a rib. Albin, the "gorjus," is indispensible to the instution. His popularity with the softer sex is due as much to his goodness of heart, and the honest length of his yard-stick, as to his good-looks. Frank Mooney, who is a high official in the useful order of the Knights of the Shears, fashions and furnishes the finest and most stylish suits for gentlemen. As a cutter he is unrivalled. Take it all in all, Barnes & Yeates "run" the Emporium of the city.

CONFESSIONS OF A MARRIED MAN.—A lady in the county, amiable, intelligent, and one whose good opinion we value highly, writes in severe terms of reprehension in regard to the series of papers under the above title, which are being published in the Sentinel. She labors under a mistake when she supposes that we are the author of them. We thank heaven that we have hitherto escaped the conjugal noose, and so ignorant of woman and their gear, that we really do not know which is worn about the leg by them—the garter or the chemise. We presume the writer of the articles is giving a true history of his married existence; at any rate he is responsible for his sins of omission or commission in that respect, and not we. We would respectfully suggest to our indignant fair friend, however, that our columns are at her service, if she desires to give the wretch what he deserves—by lamming him over her husband's shoulder, in the shape of "Confessions of a Married Woman."

COUNTY COURT DAY.—L[illegible]st Monday was county court da[illegible], and being the great Horse Show, [illegible]nd which is always attractive to farmer[illegible], seemed to be more than usually so o[illegible] this occasion, as our streets were thron[illegible]ed at an early hour.—A large number [illegible]f fine stallions were on exhibition—a[illegible]ong which we noticed the thorough-bre[illegible] horse "Glencoe," imported to this co[illegible]ty by Peters & Co. Lewis W. G[illegible]'s fine saddle stallion "Diamond," was also universally admired, while the superi[illegible] saddle horse "Sir Alfred," moved so gracefully, and being the gaited animal of the occasion, we recommend him to our farmers as an excellent opportunity to improve their stock.

RACES.—The first spring meeting of the Mt. Sterling Racing Association came off on Tuesday night last, on the Maysville pike in this city. Dr. Duerson entered the last colt, "Barber," and no other entries being made, the Dr. consented to run him against time, and we can say with all candor that we have never seen better time made. We believe we have seen racers "pick up" faster, but have never seen one jump further than the Dr.'s colt. If Mr. Alexander or Mr. Hunter wish to try the metal of Asteroid or Kentucky, they can get a race by addressing Dr. Duerson at this office.

☞ Our sanctum was illuminated on Monday last by the Constitutionally Democratic countenance of our "ancient friend and pitcher," Theoph. Van Deren, of Charleston, Illinois. Time has dealt kindlier with our old comrade than he has with us, but we flatter ourself that we can "knock him" on the good looks, with all our white hairs. He has, as will be seen by an advertisement in another column, dissolved his connexion with the dry goods firm of Van Deren & Hanks, Jeffersonville.

☞ We understand from Capt. Howard our worthy postmaster, that he has received orders from the Post office Department to open the mail route to West Liberty. This will be a great convenience to the people of that section, as heretofore they have had to send some twelve or fifteen miles to get their mail matter. Mr. Donohoe will hereafter pay his semi-weekly visits to that place on time, and we know he will receive a warm welcome.

☞ Several pieces of manuscript have very mysteriously disappeared from our office during this week, among which was a very pretty piece written by a young lady on the marriage of a friend. We are very sorry that this piece should have disappeared, but as it cannot be helped now, we have substituted something in its place, which we hope will answer the purpose.

☞ Godey—"the glass of fashion"—for May, has arrived. It is a magnificent number, full of matter well calculated to amuse, delight, and instruct the fair.

PISCATORIAL.—The disciples of "the gentle Izaak," taking advantage of the delightful weather now upon us, are deserting town by dozens, and repairing to the sylvan nooks where the finny tribes most do congregate. We confess to a touch of the contagion, ourself, and propose, at an early day, to "drop a line" to the scaly world beneath the wave.

OLD WAXY.

WAXY is standing lower than any horse of his class in Kentucky.

HE will make the present season at his old stand, one mile east of Clintonville, and will serve mares at FIFTEEN DOLLARS to insure a living colt.

Grass furnished mares from a distance at $1 50 a month, in all cases to be paid before the mare is removed. Mares sold, or otherwise disposed of, the season will be claimed.

As it is difficult and injurious to travel young colts, mares from a distance can be sent before foaling. They will be put by themselves, and great care taken with them.

Description and Pedigree:

Waxy was bred by Isaac Vanmeter; he is a beautiful chestnut sorrel, 16 hands high, and in fine health and condition.

Waxy was got by Dr. E. Warfield's thorough-bred horse Berthune; his dam was by Stormy Petrel, a thoroughbred son of Medoc; his grand dam by the celebrated Tom Hal.

THE PREMIUM SADDLE STALLION

SIR ALFRED.

THIS fine Saddle Horse will stand the present season at the stable of W. H. Gatewood, in Mt. Steeling, at $10 the season, the money due when the mare is served, or $15 to insure a mare in foal, the money due when the mare is known to be in foil or parted with. SIR ALFRED has taken ten premiums in the States of Kentucky and Illinois, among them the first and second premiums at the Illinois State Fair in the fall of 1865. As to Sir Alfred's breeding qualities, I refer to Harvey Carr, of Bourbon county, who raised him, and to Jesse Yates, Jno. Magowan, Wm. C. Magowan, J. C. Hamilton, Wm. Jones, Thos. Grubbs, and many other farmers of Montgomery county who have bred to him.

DESCRIPTION & PEDIGREE.

Sir Alfred is a dark blue roan, 15 hands 3 inches high. He is one-eighth Halcorn, one-eighth Copperbottom, one-fourth whip, and the balance canadian stock. For style, action, gait, durability and color, his colts cannot be beaten. Those wishing to raise fine horses, will do well to call and see him before breeding mares.
Mar. 21, 1866-4w. R. M. ADAIR.

GLENCOE.

THIS thorough-bred horse and getter of race, saddle and harness horses, was recently purchased by the undersigned, at a large price, in Fayette county, Ky., and will make his first season in Montgomery county at the Thompson stables, in Mount Sterling, at FIFTEEN DOLLARS the season, the money to be paid when the mare is bred. Any mare not proving to be in foal this season can be returned the next free of charge. If the horse either dies or is sold the money will be returned to those whose mares miss.

DESCRIPTION AND REMARKS.

GLENCOE is a beautiful chestnut sorrel, of fine style and carriage, 16 hands high, vigorous and in fine condition, and the sire of many premium race, saddle and harness horses. It must be acknowledged by all judges of horses that the blood horse for style, wind, powers of endurance under the saddle, to the plough, wagon or buggy, is unsurpassed by any other breed of horses in America, and when bred to harness, saddle, or roadster mares of the best Kentucky breeds, the crosses always produce the best horses in the world for either the saddle, harness, wagon or plough. The late war has fully developed the fact that the blood horse alone could stand up under the long and forced cavalry marches of both armies. The owners of Glencoe have not imported him to Montgomery county alone for their personal profit, but because they believe such a horse will improve the stock of the county. Breeders are invited to call and examine him before breeding to other horses.

PEDIGREE.

GLENCOE was sired by imported Glencoe, he by Sultan, out of Trampoline, by Tramp, Web by Waxy, Penelope by Trumpeter, Prunella by Highflyer. Glencoe's dam was by imported Leviatnan, and out of a Bertrand mare. Thus it will be seen that this horse has combined in him the best English and American blood.—Frank Forrester's American Stud Book, page 465, says that the importation of Leviathan did more to improve the stock of America than any other with the exception of Glencoe. No business done on Sunday.

DIAMOND!

THIS famous getter of saddle horses will make his first season in Clark co., at my stables, 3 miles from Winchester on the Winchester and Paris pike, at Twenty Dollars the season, one half cash in hand, the balance due when the colt is folded. Any mare not proving to be in foal this season can be returned the next free of charge. If the horse either dies or is sold, the money will be returned to those whose mares miss.

DESCRIPTION.

Diamond is a beautiful bay, with black mane and tail, 15 hands 3 inches high, and 7 years old this spring. For style and action he can't be surpassed. Diamond has been exhibited at the fairs in all the adjacent counties from sucking colt up, and has never yet been beaten. He took the first premium in his ring at the State Fair at Louisville. His first get of colts are now maturing. They are all saddle horses and commanding high prices. I believe him to be the best offered to breeders. All are invited to call and see him.

PEDIGREE.

Diamond was sired by the celebrated old saddle horse Denmark, he by the old race horse Denmark, and he by imported Hedgford. Diamond's dam was the celebrated premium saddle mare owned by Wm. V. Cromwell, who says of her that [illegible] her prime, she was the finest a[illegible] saddle mare in the state, has been ra[illegible] colts since she was 12 years old, (now 24) and is the dam of four living studs—all winners." Grass will be furnished at $2 per month. I will not be liable for any accidents.

☞ I will give in addition to the fair premiums $20 to the best horse colt, and $20 to the best mare colt sired by this horse that will be exhibited at the Clark County Fair of 1867.

The great feature of our Prize Concert is the manner in which it is gotten up, differing from anything of the kind ever before offered to the public.

1st. The Prizes are a great deal more valuable.

2d. All of them are genuine Gold and Silver goods, the very best manufactured. The Pianos and Sewing Machines are all new, and the manufacturers' names are sufficient guarantee that they are surpassed by none.

3d. The manner in which it is drawn. Each Ticket has its duplicate No., these are placed in a wheel, and thoroughly mixed, a disinterested person, (selected by the ticket holders present at the Concert,) draws these duplicate Nos. from the wheel, the first one drawn out gets the largest prize, the next one drawn out, the next largest Prize, and in like manner until all are drawn.

To enable us to give away the valuable Prizes, we first sell sufficient number of tickets to insure us against loss, the Prizes are then distributed in order as the duplicates are drawn.

Any person drawing a Prize which they wish exchanged for any other of the same value, can do so, by making application to the proprietors on presenting ticket.

Don't throw your money away on valueless concerns, but send us your orders for tickets soon, if you would secure them, as the larger portion has been already sold. Every ticket is registered before being sent out, the number, name of party purchasing, and address, and all will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

The drawing will take place after the concert, on the stage of the Hall, where the audience can witness it. A Committee will be appointed by the audience to superintend the same. All purchasers and agents will be supplied with correct lists as soon as published.—Parties holding Tickets will retain them until after the drawing, and if their number appears in the list of drawn numbers, they will forward their Ticket immediately, with full direction as to the shipping of Goods or Moneys. THE FAST TROTTING STALLION,

MONTGOMERY MORGAN,

WILL make the present season at the stable of the subscriber, living in Montgomery county, 6 miles south-west of Mt. Sterling, on the line of Clark and Montgomery, and on the road leading to Upper Howard's Creek, and will be permitted to serve a few mares at $25 to insure a mare in foal, the money due as soon as the fact is ascertained or the mare parted with.

Montgomery Morgan is a beautiful black, 16 hands and upwards high; for style and muscle he is surpassed by none. He was sired by Enoch Lewis' Morgan Chief. His sire trotted over the Association course, with 7 days handling, in April, 1860, a mile in 2:43¾, beating Albion and Kentucky Chief; Oct. 13, 1860, he beat Idol, match for $500, in 2:4[illegible]—2:42, 2:38¾; at Louisville, Oct. 26, 1860, beat Ky. ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM,
THE GREAT REMEDY
CONSUMPTION,
AND ALL DISEASES OF THE LUNGS.

THE results of its use is a proof of its great value. The extraordinary Healing Properties of this remedy are experienced by all those who have used it. Their testimony will be found in a pamphlet, which can be had of the Agents where the Medicine is for sale.

Coughs and Colds, however distressing, are broken up in an incredible short time, by causing a specific influence on the lungs, so that the matter and phlegm are easily expectorated.

Pains and Soreness of the Chest are quickly relieved, by the irritated parts becoming healed. Cold Chills and Night Sweats become immediately checked, by the strength being restored. The torpid liver is restored to action, as the blood becomes purified.

Allen's Lung Balsam contains no opium in any form. It is perfectly harmless for the most delicate child.

Consumptives would do well to read his treaties on diseased Lungs.

Physicians who have failed to cure their patients should try this Medicine before they give the case up, as we know very many valuable lives have been saved by being persuaded to give it a trial.
