It is Sunday again, and I can forget for a few brief moments this lonely existence in exile. I can scribe these few lines, and then perhaps remind me a bit, perhaps more than make little, that fond memories fail to hold me in their spell on every working moment. But these things seem to make themselves more prominent, more predominant on Sundays.

Odd thing, this I was just thinking momentarily, only a date - Dec. 7, 43.
I was home from camp on that odd day one which has a sort of special significance to a warmer feeling of admiration. He was, as has been said, very impressionable to music. The wine he had drunk, the familiar melody he did not have to strain his ear to follow, and the languorous gaze of the woman by whom he was infatuated formed a combination impossible for him to resist, even if he had sought resistance.

"Only this, I love you now!" she sang; and as the accompaniment ceased he caught her hands up off the notes.

This time she did not offer to withdraw them, and the piano was closed.

TOURNEY TALKS

In a hotly contested struggle with the outcome in doubt until the last ball was broken or lost, Barbo Barboski, southpaw stylist, offset Leginaire Koneche, 2-1 to capture the Hammerstein open Ping-Pong Championship.

A capacity crowd viewed the match from overhanging rafters, three decker bunks and a couple of conveniently placed refuse boxes.

Barbo's deceptive service found Koneche doing a original version of the Highland Fling, which was loudly applauded.

Koneche examined the paddles very thoroughly before the match and chose the one with the hole in it.

On being interviewed after his defeat, Koneche declared, "I've never played on such crumbly tables."

The 4 best exponents of miniature tennis--Allen, Morris, Spagone and Chazon, were conspicuous in their absence.

Tho he has yet to win a game, Spagone claims the championship because of his moral victories. Any game in which he gets over 3 points constitutes a moral victory --He can't help it if his morals are so low----

Flehardy also played but the temptation to kiss "Fanny" proved his downfall----

"Arab" Peters style of play was described by no less an authority than Buck Jordan, as being "Ball Bracking."

Immediately after his victory Barboski entrained for Kommando, where he hopes to play a series of exhibitions for the natives.

These chilly mornings lately have been producing some pretty interesting 2 hand touch sand lot football.

en for sportsmen to possibilities but little deprive Steiner of two pawns, ed a knight. However, fine

he white bishop and field ship prevented Weiss from breaking thru to an early score.

An immense audience cheered the exciting course of the match.

One was slightly injured when Weiss shouted, "Checkmate" and awoke so startled that he fell from the rafter--27 pfenning seat-- where he had been hanging for 3 days ---Ellery Queen had already started investigations---

Third money was captured by Flehardy using the new "T" formation which should work well for him as his men gain experience.

In a second match that was held at a later date, Kurt Steiner turned the tables on his adversary and all other competition to emerge triumphant as the winner of the tournament. In the minds of many, a 3rd tournament will be necessary to satisfy all doubts as to just who can be called the best player in the Stalag. Plans for this tourney are in the offing.

The Hammerstein Show Boat rocked through another stormy session to present "The Wages Of Sin," a melodrama of the "Roaring Twenties," presented January 16/44, in three productions, at 2, 4, and 7 PM. to a capacity audience.

The story is of poor Annie Schnitzelpletsendorffer, a woman of the world, forced to gamble all she owns, for her place in society. She finally loses everything--even her pussy--a black Maltese named Pluto.

Her "Boys" are forced to steal from the Red Cross Blood Bank to reestablish the Schnitzelpletsendorffer exchequer.

Finally, arguing about a division of the spoils the entire gang starts a gun battle which ends in the death of all. Mark Anthony looking for Caesar's body, mistakes Gunga's Gin House for the Roman Senate so he does not come in. In fact, he isn't even in the play.

"Between the scenes" our violin virtuoso, Gilbert Clark, displayed the Scranton style he learned on Redlight Street. Jim Allen, the Gawgia Hummin' Bird, sang and played the bones, and the audience went wild and applauded madly, as he left the stage.

The cold season certainly was in full swing, for as the audience left the theatre, most everyone had that icy look about them. It was so bad, that the actors could feel the icicles hanging around them. Oh, well, everything

CONCERT

The "Long Hair Hep Cats" had a jam session, Wednesday evening, Jan. 14/44. To those lovers of the "Semi-Classical" or more weighty music, it was a fine relief from Tom, Dick, and Harry and other washroom quartets.

S/Sgt Dias, of the American Army acted as narrator during the program.

Paul Whiteman, playing George Gershwin's immortal "Rhapsody in Blue" arranged by Ferde Grafe, stole the show, as only an all American team can.

Other favorites on the program were: "Beethoven's 5th symphony, 2nd movement" "Beethoven's 5th symphony, 3rd movement." Both by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, "Clair De Lune" by Debussy, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius.

The concert was so well received that it is being planned as a regular weekly feature.

DOINGS IN THE STALAG

The entertainment section has arranged a series of programs for the forthcoming weeks, which includes record playing at regular intervals, some English script films and another play for the month of February. As a deviation from the usual burlesque type which has been presented up to now, a sophisticated mystery comedy is being planned.

In addition, for other types of recreation, efforts are being made to get several poles, thereby making it possible to set up an outdoor basketball and volley ball court.

For the benefit of the Kommandos, those desiring assorted sports material, games or other recreational devices can write and efforts will be made to fill the necessary requirements. At the present moment the supply of musical instruments, sports material and parlor games is rather limited, but the YMCA has been contacted and we feel sure, that all your needs can be answered in a very short period of time.

Correspondence concerning sports materials or musical instruments should be addressed to:
