It is most pleasing to have the history of the Convention, the Associations and the local churches brought down to date.

For many years it has been the purpose of our leading pastors and officers of the Convention to have someone undertake this difficult task, but due to the lack of financial resources this has been impossible.

We greatly appreciate the farsight on the part of our Government to place in the hands of the New Jersey Baptists the valuable information which this compilation contains.

We believe the task has been well done and should add to the efficiency of our work for many years to come. It will be discovered that there are many new features in this present inventory.

PREFACE

The Inventory of the Church Archives of New Jersey: Baptist Bodies is one of a nation-wide series of inventories of the archives of all denominations now being compiled by the Historical Records Survey. The inventory is intended to serve not only the clergy and officers of religions organizations, but also students of social and economic history, and persons engaged in genealogical research.

The information contained in this inventory is based largely upon the statements of clergymen and church officials. Such information has been supplemented by research in printed works and in the public archives.

While the Survey has attempted to check the accuracy of all this information, the editors realize that many inaccuracies and imperfections may survive after the most careful editing. It is the hope of the Survey staff that readers will not hesitate to inform the director of any errors in the book.

The field collection of data was by certified white-collar workers of the Works Progress Administration. After the original material was assembled in the state office of the Survey, it was edited by a staff of research editors under the supervision of Gustave Koeppe. Rev. James Leland Vass, D.D. of the Baptist faith, wrote the introductory essay. The series of maps, tracing the growth and development of the denomination in the state, was designed by Elmer V. Swan, project cartographer. Donald A. Thompson, church editor of the National office, has read and criticized the manuscript.

THE NEW JERSEY BAPTISTS

The Jerseys and Pennsylvania offered strong attractions to early Baptists from 1682 onward. Here more definitely than in any part of the new world the church found fertile soil and favorable conditions, promoting organization, unity and uniformity. In 1674, England established her claim to the possession of Nova Caeserea, New Jersey. (1) Thus she confirmed her grants of this territory by the crown to the Duke of York, and by him to Sir George Carteret and to Lord John Berekeley. (2) An attitude of toleration had been clearly exemplified by Carteret and Berkeley throughout their earlier relations to the Jerseys. This, together with the purchase of Berkeley's interest by the Quakers Fenwicke and Byllynge, opened the door to a large influx of Baptists from England, Wales, Ireland, and New England. (3)

The Quakers had control of West Jersey from 1677 onward. Following the death of Carteret a company of Quakers, with William Penn at their head, purchased his interests in 1682. (4) One year earlier this same company under Penn had purchased Pennsylvania, Charles II, granting the deed in default of the payment of 80,000 pounds which the crown owed Penn's father. The two areas, Pennsylvania and West Jersey, became a haven at once for "radical" and primitive types of Christianity. To the historian, purely as such, it will always seem a marvel that a king as Charles II, should sell so rich a territory purchased for the avowed purpose of developing a haven of religions freedom, thus abetting the development of what Anglican England regarded as the most radical form of Christianity. To the churchman it is just one more demonstration of Providence.

Into these areas of West Jersey and Pennsylvania poured a constant stream of settlers interested in finding new homes, but primarily concerned about religious freedom. Through the short interval of four years came Quakers, Mennonites, Dunkards, Pietists, and Baptists in such increasing numbers that the year 1685 found a population of seven thousand two hundred happy, thriving separatists. (5)

The setting up of Baptist churches in Baptist communities, the early crusading, missionary spirit of their pastors, will be described in due course. In order to bring the story of Baptists in East New Jersey down to approximately this same period, it will be necessary to sketch in a background that contains more complications and more stimuli.

As early as the second quarter of the same century there was a similar influx of colonists into New England, but under very different conditions. Whereas the Jerseys in the fourth quarter offered liberty under the Proprietors and Quaker influences, inviting "separatists" to their shores, Massachusetts under direct patent grants from James I. and his son, Charles I., offered barren soil indeed for separatists. Fifty years of colonial growth in Massachusetts found only a few Baptist churches. Some of these had compromised their earlier fixed convictions, and the staunch and true were pitifully weak. (6) The local authorities were non-conformists, seeking a measure of freedom from the English church, but were not separatists. Cotton, Hooker, Winthrop, Endicott are names in New England's seventeenth century life suggestive of the colonial theocracy there.

This definite desire to remain a part of the Anglican body and yet not in sympathy with it, this caution on the part of the church-state order in New England, may be accounted for in several ways. Out of England during the reign of Charles I., the protectorate of the swashbuckling puritan Cromwell, and the reign of Charles II., with his avowals of revenge, came group after group. Dependent on the mother country in many ways, and governed by agents sent them by the crown, the state early adopted an attitude of amelioration.

The suspicions of this church-state theocracy were directed against all Anabaptists and Antipedobaptists. In early Massachusetts the word Baptist had the power to suggest the "Munster Kingdom", and the authorities were over fearful of a repetition of a religious war with the horrors of Munster. (7) This attitude was to be found in Virginia in the middle of this same first century of colonization, for in Virginia as well as in Massachusetts religion was a social factor.

The first important step in freeing religion from the tradition of overhead authority was the protest of Roger Williams against the influence of Massachusetts officials over the church. (8) Puritanism was only a half step from a state controlled religion to the independence of separatism. Feeling this, Williams led in the establishment of the first free colony in America on land purchased from the Indians of the Narragansett Bay area. There was nothing to prevent him and his followers, convinced of the correctness of Baptist views, from organizing a Baptist church. It is true that the restless researching mind of the man led him farther into the frontier of religious experiment; but the Baptist church at Providence continued to stand out as an asylum to the persecuted in Massachusetts and in Connectiout.

John Clarke, who obtained the charter for these Narragansett Bay settlements in 1663, was the organizer and pastor of the Baptist Church in Newport, an early settlement in this Rhode Island group. They, John and Roger, were a great pair, but their greatness was most impressive in their self denials. (9)

Connection with the English church that New England communities seemed to regard so necessary was not endorsed by all coming to her shores. In Rhode Island a group of strong and determined Baptists held their influence and grew throughout this difficult century. The colony became a haven for all Antipedobaptists suffering from Massachusetts persecutions. From its crusading Baptist ministers traveled into Long Island, locating a church in the present Oyster Bay area. Others visited Dutch settlements in New Amsterdam and organized with surprising success.

It is fitting that this early Baptist pastor, Roger Williams, be used to turn our Baptist history back to East Jersey scenes. This Williams, whom we have credited with having founded the first government of civil and religious freedom in America, was of Welsh origin. In Wales, perhaps because of its isolation, the right to worship as conscience dictated was enjoyed to a greater extent than in England. The desire for continued unrestricted worship was brought to East Jersey by early Welsh Baptists who were beginning to feel the effects of the Act of Uniformity of 1662.

During the period of Penn's promotion of freedom for settlers in Pennsylvania and West Jersey, East Jersey under proprietary grants and concessions was opening a haven not only to those Welsh, but to the persecuted in Massachusetts and Connecticut. Non-conformists of Antipedobaptist leanings in New England, together with separatist groups in England, Ireland and the German states found New Jersey's Atlantic coast most inviting.

So many Baptists found their way into the Raritan Bay area, that one is justified in calling Monmouth County a Baptist county in 1700. In the Middletown area (10) an impressive Baptist community, made up of immigrants from Rhode Island and Long Island, was in existence as early as 1665. They enjoyed their anticipated freedom from the beginning. In an early list of instructions from the proprietors to Governor Basso we find, "you do not consent to a law for imposing...any Tax... for the maintenance of any sort of Preachers..." (11) Even as early as 1672, Sir George Carteret formally agreed that among certain privileges to Middletown and Shrewsbury, "No Clergyman shall be imposed upon them". (12)

The Middletown church originally covered a wide area. The earliest Baptist church south of Rhode Island, it was organized as early as 1668. (13) As with many early colonial communities, services were held in homes of members for a number of years before a house of worship was built and dedicated. The majority of the members settled in or near old Baptistown. Among the earliest to locate here with the Bray family. Later moving farther west into Hunterdon County they named their new settlement Baptistown. This caused the colonists in Monmouth to adopt the name of Holmdel, memorializing the Massachusetts martyr, Obadiah Holmes, Sr., the father of three sons who so prominently figured in Jersey and Pennsylvania Baptist history. (14) James Ashton, the first pastor, lived west of Holmdel, which was made the center of the wide church community. Here also were built the first and second churches and parsonages. The church at Holmdel was known as "The Upper Meeting House" , and the one at Middletown as "The Lower Meeting House". From this Holmdel center, radiating from both the upper and lower congregations, early Baptist pastors went into many parts of Jersey laying the foundations of Baptist churches. From the ocean to the Delaware, to far south of Trenton, they covered a vast territory. Middletown was the ancestress of nearly all the Baptist churches in Hunterdon, Warren and Sussex counties. Through Cohansey, First Hopewell and Hightstown she became the fountainhead of Baptists in north, central and south Jersey. (15)

It will not prove too great a digression at this point to introduce the organization of the first Baptist stronghold in western Pennsylvania. This will give us a picture of Baptist beginnings in both East and West Jersey, since West Jersey felt the barrier of the line of cleavage produced in early days by the quintipartite deed separating the provinces. (16) As the influence of Middletown was felt throughout the eastern province, so the Pennepek Church influenced the west and south of Jersey.

The first Baptist church to be organized in the Quaker area west of the Delaware river was located at Cold Spring, Bucks County, Pennsylvania, about 1684. Its pastor was Thomas Dungan, an Irish Baptist minister who had been for some time a member of the Newport church. (17) The mother of all Baptist churches in Pennsylvania and many in the provinces of West Jersey is the Baptist church organized at Pennepek, or Lower Dublin, in 1688. On the Pennepek River several Baptist families from Radnorshire, Wales, together with an Irish and an English Baptist, set up a worship center that early became the focal point of the historic and influential Philadelphia Baptist Association.

Organized in 1707, this Philadelphia Baptist Association solidified an extended Baptist influence in the American colonies. The congregations of five churches, three in New Jersey, one in Delaware, (18) and the Pennepek Church united in annual meetings. The most capable members of each church in the group were sent to these meetings to consult about such things as were wanting in the churches. It is to the credit of our early New Jersey Baptists that they cooperated so enthusiastically with the missionary spirit of the association, often setting the pace.

Another Jersey church represented in the organization of this Philadelphia association was at Piscataway. About 1689 a group settled in East Jersey, just inland from Raritan Bay and somewhat northwest of the Middletown-Homdel area. With the assistance of Rev. Thomas Killingsworth, these newcomers organized a Baptist church at once, with Rev. John Drake as the first pastor. To their church and community they gave the name of the former home of earlier forebears in New England. Records of this church and its early history were destroyed during the Revolution, but its early crusading missionary spirit was felt in the Philadelphia association.

The third Jersey Baptist church in the first organization of the Philadelphia Association was on the Cohansey river in the southern part of the state. In 1687 Baptists from the Tipperary section of Ireland settled in this community. Two years later, Obadiah Holmes, Jr., and John Cornelius came from Rhode Island, and Thomas Killingsworth arrived from England. With a few others who had been baptized by Rev. Elias Keach, they formed the Cohansey church in 1691. Rev. Thomas Killingsworth was the first pastor, serving here with great devotion to the cause until his death in 1708. He was greatly assisted by Obadiah Holmes, Jr., son of the distinguished Massachusetts Baptist martyr. Mr. Holmes was a minister and also judge of common pleas in Salem court. (19) A scholarly and devout citizen, he rendered great service among West Jersey Baptists. The presence of such men as Keach, Killingsworth, Holmes, and Morgan in the earliest denominational affairs explains much of the success of these first churches in steering a safe course through the dangers of such questions as absolute predestination, laying on of hands, psalm singing and Sabbatarianism. (20)

Outside of the Jerseys and the Pennepek area, Protestant churches were slow to appreciate the value of wide denominational unity. The very nature of the impulse creating the separatist movement stood in the way. The free spirit that moved in the hearts of those early Baptists bespoke caution. The experiment in colonial synods of Congregational churches in New England had lead to nothing permanent. It was nearly fifty years after the Philadelphia Association was organized that Baptists in South Carolina developed an associational plan, and ten years more before New England Baptists tried a desultory four church group. In the few years following its inception the Philadelphia Baptist Association, with its vigorous churches, acquired the hegemony of American Baptists, a dignity it still maintains. Their heritage of freedom made it easy for these early New Jersey Baptists to fix the characteristics that have always discriminated Baptists everywhere since New Testament days.

Mutuality: Congregational government, often criticized by Pedobaptists, has proven a source of strength. Divisions and heresies have been localized, and until solved and settled have not affected the progress of sister churches elsewhere. In its practice this very mutuality has instanced the shoulder to shoulder cooperation of all churches holding the same distinctive faith. It has demanded unquestionable evangelicalism, economy that is congregational, and heartiest fellowship with Baptist faith and practice. This general good, in preference to personal preferment, is illustrated in the foundir of the Philadelphia Baptist Association, with one church each in Pennsylvania and Delaware, and three in New Jersey.

Early missionary spirit: Long journeys were taken south and west, churches consenting to long absences of pastors for the common good. The interests of the Philadelphia Association extended from southern Connecticut to Georgia. The New York Association, organized in 1791, presents a similar Jersey Baptist contribution to the missionary program. In this association, the majority of the members were New Jersey Baptist churches, and when the East New Jersey churches withdrew in 1841 to form their own association, the New York Association soon thereafter collapsed.

Comprehension of educational needs: In 1722 a training school was organized by the Philadelphia Association. The first Baptist school in America worthy to be called such, was founded at Hopewell. It was in 1715 that the Baptist community around Hopewell organized a church. This body was under the care of visiting ministers from Middletown, Piscataway, Cohansey and Philadelphia, until 1748, when Rev. Isaac Eaton became its pastor. Hopewell Academy was established during his pastorate. The first president of Rhode Island College, now Brown University, was prepared for college there, and it is quite probable that the early plans for Brown University originated in the Hopewell Baptist membership. (21)

James Manning, the son of Isaac Manning of Scotch Plains, was baptized by Rev. Benjamin Miller in 1758. Prepared for college at Hopewell under Rev. Isaac Eaton, he entered Princeton University, then called the College of New Jersey. Graduating in 1762, he was selected by the Philadelphia Association to begin a campaign leading to the founding of a grammar school at Warren, Rhode Island. Already ordained to the Baptist ministry, he became the first pastor of a new church there in 1764. A year later a charter was granted by the assembly of the province authorizing the establishment of the College of Rhode Island. Mr. Manning was made president of the college and professor of languages. In 1770 the college was moved to Providence and President Manning was also called to the pastorate of the historic Baptist church there. New Jersey had provided a great Baptist pastor for Roger Williams' church, and a great president for a Baptist College.

At this point it will be of interest to Baptists to observe the growth of churches in their denomination from the organization of the first three centers to the end of the eighteenth century.

As early as 1641 English colonists from Connecticut had settled at Salemtown, one of the oldest settlements in New Jersey. In 1683 Obadiah Holmes, Jr., came to Salem. Pastors from Cohansey began missionary work and Salem was one of the first out-stations of this church. In all probability Judge Holmes lived in Salem. This would make this church contemporary with the early Cohansey organization. The formal organization of Salem as recognized by the Philadelphia Association carries the date 1741. Within the same century seven colonies went out from the Salem church. (22) The church at Alloway (Mill Hollow) was closely connected with Salem's early history.

Although the Cape May church was organized in 1712, its foundation was laid more than thirty years earlier by the settlement of a few members who met at various homes. These groups were visited by various missionary minded ministers of East Jersey and of the Pennepek area. Rev. Nathaniel Jenkins, a native of Wales, was the first regularly installed pastor. It is of interest to note that the Cape May church is the first Baptist church to recognize wives and daughters as equally entitled to be enrolled as constituents of a gospel church. (23)

Burlington was a center of Baptist activity from the earliest years. Yearly meetings of the Philadelphia Association were held here and probably a Baptist church was in existence quite early. The present church at Burlington was formed in 1801. The missionary work of pastors of Pennepek, Philadelphia, and Cohansey organizations in the association led to the formation of Dividing Creek in 1749, Pemberton in 1764, Pittsgrove and Tuckahoe in 1771.

Returning to a survey of the Middletown field, we find Hopewell Baptist church set up a colony of the Middletown church in 1715. Grouped with those in the organization were several former members of the Pennepek church. Johnathan Stout was the founder. The earliest Jersey Baptist church, Middletown has been the mother of more than one hundred churches. They were planted not only in New Jersey, but in Pennsylvania, New York and in the southern colonies. Warren, Sussex, and Hunterdon counties were planted with out-stations of Middletown. Many of these grow into independent churches during the century.

From Middletown through Hopewell the Baptists at Kingwood organized a church in 1742. The foundation of this organization was laid twenty years

(22) Griffiths, op. cit., Chap. II.
(23) Idem., Chap. XXXV.

earlier by Baptist families who had moved into this West Jersey community from the Hopewell and Middletown - Holmdel areas. Rev. Thomas Curtis was the first pastor of the new church. Kingwood was preeminently a missionary church. Now Baptistown, Kingwood is best known as the mother of the Mt. Olive, Knollton, and Flemington churches in the eighteenth century, and of Bethlehem and Frenchtown later.

Known as the Cranbury Baptist Church until 1786, Hightstown was organized in 1745. This church is also a daughter of old Middletown. Through the growth of nearly two full centuries two things stand out in the history of Hightstown Baptists. Through their support and interest Peddie Institute was established. Of large contribution to the New Jersey Baptist cause, she contributed more than any other church to the associational organization of the denomination in the state.

An outstanding colony from the Piscataway Baptists is the church at Scotch Plains, organized in 1747. At that time the few independent Baptist churches in New Jersey were widely separated. A glance at the accompanying map shows the key positions occupied by Middletown, Piscataway, Cohansey, Cape May, Hopewell, Kingwood, Hightstown. To this active, missionary group Scotch Plains was welcomed. A number of families in the Scotch Plains area had been identified with Piscataway for generation, or longer. Distance and difficulty of travel brought about the separation. Immediately uniting with the Philadelphia Association, they called Rev. Benjamin Miller to their pastorate. He served with signal success for thirty-four years.

At this time there was no regular Baptist church in New York City. Several Baptist families were encouraged to unite with Scotch Plains and Hightstown, and were visited by the pastors of those churches. In 1762 their first church edifice was erected on Gold Street. Their first pastor was Rev. John Gano, a member of the Scotch Plains Baptist group. He served this New York congregation wisely and well for twenty-six years.

The Scotch Plains church colonized fruitfully. Out of it came Morristown in 1752, Mt. Bethel in 1767, Lyon's Farms in 1769. (24) Manahawkin in 1770, Samptown in 1792, and numerous others in the next century. It is interesting to note that Morristown was settled by David Goble and family, who came from Charleston, S.C., in 1715. As in so many early Baptist communities, preaching services were held in his home for many years prior to the establishment of the church cited above.

Interesting history lies behind several churches organized in the eighteenth century. Some of these represent independent organizations not growing out of the missionary endeavor of the three early mother churches. Schooley's Mountain was settled in 1753 by Samuel Heaton and his three sons. This family came from Wrentham, Massachusetts, to develop iron works on the mountain. They established a Baptist church that same year, calling it Rocksbury church from 1753 to 1768, the name of the township in which the meeting house was built. From 1768 to 1890 the church was known as Schooley's Mountain Baptist church. Mt. Olive was also founded by Mr. Heaton and has maintained an unbroken record since 1753. It is a matter of record, however, that such independent organizations were loyally sponsored by the early associational structure, and in numerous instances were materially assisted in their financial problems.

(24) The mother of the first Baptist church in Newark.

Thus far we have devoted space only to the three great mother churches of New Jersey Baptists in the eighteenth century, together with their outstanding colonies. In so brief a sketch of New Jersey Baptist history it is clearly impossible to set up each out-station of these early missionary churches. For detailed accounts the reader is referred to the attached bibliography.

Before leaving this picture of the eighteenth century Baptists in New Jersey examination should be had into certain problems that the pastors and constituents faced and so happily solved. The mid-century was a significant turning point for much of the world's thinking. The reform school movement in France, the intelligentsia of England, and other continental thinkers were strongly influencing New England. New Jersey Baptist circles were not without certain dangerous repercussions. Strong leaders endowed with great faith were needed.

The New England religious thinking of this period was coincidental with the rise of Unitarianism. It was a natural swing to the left of a large group which had been repressed so long by an overwrought Puritanism. The weak Baptist churches and Pedobaptists there had become not only Arminian, but were experiencing a sharp swing to the left in their theology and the churches were filled with Antinomian philosphy.

The Philadelphia Baptist Association, confronted from its inception with the problem of harmonizing General and Particular Baptists, did not adopt a Calvinistic confession of faith until 1742. This "confession" was the banner of the Particular Baptists in England. The declaration of the Philadelphia Association came at an auspicious moment. New Jersey Particular Baptists, strong in their Calvinistic leanings, were feeling the attacks of a subtly Antinomian reaction. Inspired by the great preaching of Jonathan Edwards and George Whitefield in New England, New Jersey pastors lost comparatively few of their groups in this leftward swing. The great need for adjustment and conservation of appeal stimulated denominational life in New Jersey. Out of the adjusting processes of the period came a modified and evangelical form of Calvinism under which the great bodies of Baptist peoples have long since united.

It would be impossible to list so briefly the group of leaders responsible for this invaluable contribution to the cause of New Jersey Baptists. Always in this vanguard were the pastors of the older churches, and such eminent denominational historians as Abel Morgan of the Pennepek church, Benjamin Griffith, the first official historian, and the inimitable Morgan Edwards devoting his last twenty-five years to collecting materials for a denominational history.(

The nineteenth century brought another great problem to New Jersey Baptists. At the beginning of the century the churches and pastors were faced with certain anti-religious influences permeating the entire state. Not only in Jersey, but throughout the nation conditions were such that the period from 1800 to 1825 was frequently referred to as the godless age. Protestant churches in America has not committed themselves definitely to a temperance program. In New Jersey a few Baptist pastors were not always careful to set a perfect example in temperance. In Virginia and other southern states the same was true. The wise leaders in the denomination needed all the grace of their ministry and devotion in steering their flocks safely through.

(25) Edward, Morgan, Materials for a History of the American Baptists: Vol. II., Materials towards a History of the Baptists in Jersey.

Far more insidious and more dangerous to the cause in New Jersey were the prevailing atheistic tendencies of the age. Colleges were openly encouraging students to question the old verities of religion.

Jersey Baptists, strengthened by their evangelical Calvinism in the preceding century, fought valiantly and well to overcome this grave danger. Every age has its youth problem, and the churches felt theirs deeply. Strong doctrinal sermons, coupled with a growing conviction among pastors that they needed to know their young people better, were efforts pointing in the right direction. Bible schools were added to the preaching program in many outstations, and the loyal leaders in every Baptist community served unselfishly in the campaign to remove every vestige of doubt for their youth.

A natural outgrowth of this concern for their own, accompanied by an increased activity, led easily into the campaign of the century for intensive associational organization. Already filled with missionary ardor, as we have seen, New Jersey Baptist churches gave themselves without stint to the movement.

As stated above the Philadelphia Association was organized in 1707. The attention of the reader has been drawn to the fact that West Jersey and East Jersey felt the psychological effect of the "dividing line" (26) for a long time after the surrender of the provinces to the crown in 1702. Among Baptists there was a measure of cooperation under the Philadelphia hegemony, Piscataway and Middletown leading in this throughout the eighteenth century. Early in the following century Baptist leaders in the state believed that a state wide campaign for local growth and missionary enterprise would be abetted by a state association. In consequence the New Jersey Association was organized in 1811. It then embraced all the churches of the central, western and southern parts of the state. A reference to the second map in the series discloses the barrier of the "dividing line" still in effect.

At this point attention should be called to the fact that during the early part of the nineteenth century overland travel was often accompanied by difficulties. The easier approach to New York, and intercommunication along the coast, were active influences promoting the organization of the Hudson River and New York Association. Already in existence when the New Jersey Association was formed, the churches of eastern Jersey continued to support it. They had been the supporting strength of the New York churches and felt it inadvisable to withdraw in 1811.

Following the setting up of the New Jersey Association in 1811 at Hightstown, the mother and sponsor of so many associations, the Baptist mission work in the state continued to radiate from two focal points. An inspection of the evolutional growth of the subsequent organization (27) discloses the slow but certain progress that was made in welding the entire state body into a solid unit.

Again at Hightstown another important step in associational and missionary growth was taken in 1828. It was felt that a closer spirit of cooperation could be had between the Baptist churches in the central part of New Jersey, east and west of the "partition" line, if they could be organized into a definite group. Accordingly the Central New Jersey Association came into active existence. Many of the Baptist churches of eastern New Jersey cooperated, leading their old affiliation with New York. It was a great step forward. This group of churches was now better prepared for concentrated effort looking toward primitive areas where the idea of missions was all too slowly taking root. The program of this denominational missionary unit was not without difficulty. A Delaware River Association was constituted in 1835, and the helpful influence of Hopewell and Kingwood were lost for a few years.

In 1833 a third association was organized. Four churches, dissatisfied with the anti-missionary spirit of the old Warwick led in a movement to set up the Sussex Association. This group of churches lay in Sussex County, and led in the subsequent movement that embraced Sussex, Passaic, and Bergen counties, now known as the North Association.

Organized in New Brunswick, November 4, 1842, the East New Jersey Association fulfilled the earlier hope of the New Jersey Association. Including historic Middletown and Piscataway, together with their colonies, the East Association initiated an inclusive state program for the first time. From this time until the present New Jersey Baptist denominational enterprise followed definite state lines. The state Baptist Convention, of which we shall treat later, has greatly strengthened this solidifying process.

In the latter half of the century associational lines were drawn still more tightly. Trenton Association was set up in 1864, Central and the old New Jersey Association contributing. Camden Association was organized in 1887, and the historic New Jersey changed its name of West Association. The bounds of the North Association were further reduced in 1894 by the organization of the Morris and Essex Association. The area of the East Association was more clearly defined by setting up Monmouth in 1898 and Hudson in 1917.

A powerful factor stimulating this evolutionary growth of Baptist associations in New Jersey was the State Baptist Convention. Its origin may be said to lie in the New Jersey Association and the strong missionary purpose visible in 1811. In the first meeting of this association a resolution was passed seeking incorporation to organize a New Jersey Mission Society and to found a school for Baptists. (28) The need for state wide direction and organization sufficient to support a great Baptist program in New Jersey was so apparent by 1830 that on July 27 a preliminary meeting was held at Hamilton Square Baptist Church for organization purposes. On November 2, the same year, at Trenton, the convention was opened with fifty-five churches participating. The total membership of these fifty-five churches in 1830 was three thousand nine hundred and sixty-seven. In a century's time the number of churches had grown to four hundred and seventy-four, and total membership had increased to one hundred and sixteen thousand, one hundred and twenty-nine.

A legislative enactment of 1841 fixed the name as New Jersey Baptist State Convention. (29) In 1893 the legislature enacted a law permitting changes in name, number of officers and terms of same, and establishment of new departments of activity. (30) Under this law the name was changed in 1894 to the New Jersey Baptist Convention, the term "State" having been omitted.

1908 was another important year for the convention. The state wide administration of the Baptist Education Society, the Baptist Young People's Union, and the Convention merged under the present corporate title. The church Edifice Department became part of the general convention program after the merger of 1908. (31)

Besides lending its support over these years to general missionary endeavor and Bible training of its youth, the State Convention has liberally endorsed evangelical work throughout the state. Of particular interest to the metropolitan parts of the state is the work among foreign language Baptists within the state. Italian Baptist Churches have been successfully organized in Camden, Newark, and Trenton. The convention assists in the support of Polish Baptist churches in Camden, Plainfield, Bayonne, and Jersey City. Hungarian Baptist churches are active in New Brunswick, Carteret, Perth Amboy, Trenton, and Garfield. There is a Magyar Baptist church in Trenton and a Russian Baptist mission in Newark.

The New Jersey Baptist Convention has been an active and coordinating part of the Northern Baptist Convention since the latter was organized in 1907. The national organization was the result of wide agitation for the unifying of the work of the northern Baptists. As early as 1814, in the month of May, a General Convention of the Baptist Denomination for Foreign Missions was organized in Philadelphia. In 1824 a Tract Society was organized in Washington, merging a bit later into the American Baptist Publication Society of Philadelphia. In 1832 the American Baptist Home Mission Society came into existence. Here then was a threefold national endeavor for New Jersey Baptists to support, an endeavor weak in coordination. Following the withdrawal of southern Baptists in 1845, the American Baptist Missionary Union was the convention of northern Baptists until 1907. Throughout this national evolution of Baptist inter-state coordination New Jersey churches have supported the cause loyally.

Because of differences in interpretation and belief it has not been possible to develop coordination between New Jersey Baptists and the churches called Primitive Baptists or Old School Baptists. They still possess a limited membership in certain isolated communities of the state. They are anti-missionary and since 1835 have regarded themselves as separated from all associational organization. Discouraging Sunday School organization, opposing theological seminaries, they do not believe in a paid ministry.

The Seventh Day Baptists are missionary in spirit and generally similar to the regular Baptists. They are relatively few in New Jersey, but have an active national conference with which the few New Jersey churches affiliate through their own state association. This Eastern Seventh Day Baptist association was organized in 1836. Its headquarters are in Plainfield, where the Seventh Day Baptists have one of their outstanding congregations. Their national organization, with general conference headquarters at Westerly, Rhode Island, maintains a publishing house at Plainfield.

The New Jersey Baptist Convention has set up a commission on Afro-American churches. (32) This commission consists of seven members whose duty it is to cooperate with a like commission of the Afro-American Baptist State Convention and its four associations in the state. They bring to the attention of all Baptist churches matters pertaining to the denominational needs of both conventions, adopting plans to promote cooperation. In the larger cities and towns within the state recent years have brought tremendous increase in the growth of their Negro population. The great majority of these come from southern states where Baptists and Methodists are very strong numerically. Besides store front congregations that present persistent problems to both state conventions, the Negro Baptists have numerous churches throughout the state that are making excellent progress and promoting denominational strength.

The Afro-American State Baptist Convention is the organization under which the Negro Baptist churches in New Jersey are grouped. There are four associational organizations in this state convention. The northern district is known as the North Jersey Baptist Association and embraces fifty seven churches. The Middlesex Central Baptist Association has forty one active churches in its organization. The Sea Coast Baptist Association contains twenty active churches, and the Negro Baptist churches in the southern and southwestern part of the State are organized in the Bethany Baptist Association. This last association contains sixty seven participating churches. In addition there are sixty nine organized Negro Baptist churches not listed in any association. The state convention is an active affiliate of the National Baptist Convention. The Afro-American State Baptist Convention is justifiably proud of its educational project at Long Branch. The Northern Baptist University there is rendering valuable service.

The New Jersey Baptist Convention and its associational organizations are placing all of their efforts behind an effective Sunday School program. The first Bible School was organized in Newark in 1794. The first Baptist Sunday School in New Jersey was organized at Holmdel in 1816, the Trenton and Lamberton Sunday Free School Association appearing one year later. Today the great majority of Baptist churches in the state have well organized and graded Sunday Schools. This Bible training is supplemented by the excellent work of the young people's organizations and vacation Bible schools, as successful since the turn of the present century.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

The following assumptions should be made by readers of this inventory:

1. That full names of individuals have been given except where such information was not obtainable.

2. That exact street addresses have been given except where no street designation existed or where the information was not obtainable.

3. That all records have been listed. Where the beginning date of a record does not coincide with the organization date of the church, earlier records have not been found. Where no mention is made of a particular kind of record, or where no records have been listed for church organizations mentioned in the body of the entry, no such records could be located.

4. That the date and manner in which a church building was obtained or disposed of have been indicated except where such information was not available.

NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

A. NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

This convention was organized in 1907 in Washington D.C. Thirty-five state conventions are cooperating members and assist in the work of the convention. Meetings are held annually, the place of meeting being selected by a committee appointed for that purpose. The governing body consists of a moderator, corresponding secretary, recording secretary, treasurer and clerk of minutes. First moderator, Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, Washington, D.C. Present moderator, Arthur J. Hudson, 870 Union Commerce Building, Cleveland, Ohio; present corresponding secretary, Rev. Maurice A. Levy, 420 Elmira Street, Williamsport, Pennsylvania.
(See the forthcoming Inventory of the Church Archives of New York City).

B. SEVENTH DAY BAPTIST GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1802--, Plainfield, Union County.

Organized 1802, as a culmination of a Seventh Day Baptist movement which had existed in an organized form in America since 1671. The conference is a delegate body representing churches and national organizations. Most recent meeting of the conference, Plainfield, August 23-28, 1938. Incorporated in Rhode Island under Article III of Chapter 248 of the General Laws, August 25, 1927, with statutory office at Westerly, Rhode Island.

Affiliate bodies; Seventh Day Baptist Missionary Society, Ashaway, Rhode Island, organized 1828, incorporated 1846; American Sabbath Tract Society of New York, Plainfield, New Jersey, organized 1843 (of New Jersey, Plainfield, organized 1921); Seventh Day Baptist Education Society, Alfred University, Alfred, New York, organized 1852.

Present president of the General Conference, Mr. Courtland V. Davis, 510 Watchung Avenue, Plainfield; present corresponding secretary, Reverend Hurley S. Warren, 511 Central Avenue, Plainfield.

Historical studies regarding Seventh Day Baptist churches are largely concentrated in the Seventh Day Baptist Historical Association, 510 Watchung Avenue, Plainfield. Dr. Corliss F. Randolph, at the above address, is president.
